GOING BY.

She pushes back her bonnet brown,
A rustic glance to raise;
Her blue-black lovelocks slipping down
To veil the bashful gaze;
In kerchief white and russet gown
A dreaming of the painted town,
Half bold and wholly shy
She lifts her head—her foot she stays
As I go by.

The lonley pastures stretch behind
In yellow, parching heat;
I watch the dappled river wind
By shadows clear and sweet,
Through many footpaths far and blind,
With silver birch and poplar-lined,
My lonly walk shall lie—
Behind them runs the village street—
And I—go by.

Across the laurel-bordered rise
The hills are blue as steel—
The splendour of the harvest skies
Is white against my wheel.
Again the look of sweet surprise,
The graceful arm, the restive eyes,
The gesture frank and shy—
A stranger's glance of lost appeal
As I go by.

I cross the bridge—I mount the hill
All black with hemlock shade;
I pass the ancient, ruined mill,
The green and silent glade—
Yet haste or linger where I will,
Her girlish figure draws me still
And mutely waits reply—
Late, late I come, my mountain maid,
And all the world goes by.

CHAPTER IV.

THE POLLARDS.

There's something in his soul,
O'er which his melancholy sits on brood.
—HAMLET.

FEARFUL as the experiences of this day had been, they were not yet at an end, for me. Indeed, the most remarkable were to come. As I sat in this room of death—it was not far from mid night—I suddenly heard voices at the door, and Mrs. Gannon came in with Dr. Farnham.

"It is very extraordinary," I heard him mutter, as he crossed the threshold. "One dying and another dead, and both struck down with the same cause."

I could not imagine what he meant, so I looked at him with some amazement. But he did not seem to heed me. Going straight to the bed, he gazed silently at Ada's pure features, with what I could not but consider a troubled glance. Then turning quickly to Mrs. Gannon, he said, in his somewhat brusque way:

"All is over here; you can therefore leave. I have a patient who demands your instant care."

"But——" she began.

"I have come to purpose for you," he put in, authoritatively. "It is an urgent case; do not keep me waiting."

"But, sir," she persisted, "it is impossible. I am expected early in the morning at Scott's Corners, and was just going to bed when you came in, in order to get a little sleep before taking the train."

"Dr. Perry's case?"

"Yes."

He frowned, and I am not sure but what he uttered a wild oath. At all events, he seemed very much put out.

I immediately drew near.

"Oh, sir," I cried, "if you would have confidence in me. I am not unused to the work, and——"

His stare frightened me, it was so searching and so keen.

"Who are you?" he asked.

I told him, and Mrs. Gannon put in a word for me. I was reliable, she said, and if too much experience was not wanted, would do better than such and such a one—naming certain persons, probably neighbors.

But the doctors steady look told me he relied more on his own judgement than on anything she or I could say.

"Can you hold your tongue," he asked.

I started. Who would not have done so?

"I see that you can be muttered, and glanced down at my dress. "When can you be ready?" he inquired. "You may be wanted for days, and it may be only for hours."

"Will ten minutes be soon enough?" I asked.

A smile difficult to fathom crossed his firm lip.

"I will give you fifteen," he said, and turned towards the door. But on the threshold he paused and looked back. "You have not asked who or what your patient is," he grimly suggested.

"No," I answered shortly.

"Well," said he, "it is Mrs. Pollard, and she is going to die."

Mrs. Pollard! Mrs. Gannon and I involuntarily turned and looked at each other.

"Mrs. Pollard!" repeated the good nurse, wonderingly. "I did not know she was sick."

"She wasn't this noon. It is a sudden attack. Apoplexy we call it. She fell at the news of Mr. Barrows' death."

And with this parting shot, he went out and closed the door behind him.

I sank, just a little bit weakened, on lounge, then rose with renewed vigor. "The work has fallen into the right hands," thought I. "Ada would wish me to leave no stone unturned for such a task as this."

And yet I was troubled. For though the sudden prostration of Mrs. Pollard, on the learning of her young pastor's sorrowful death, seemed to betoken a nature of more than ordinary sensibility, I had always heard that she was a hard woman with an eye of steel and a heart that could only be reached through selfish interests. But then she was the magnate of the place, the beginning and end of the aristocracy of S——, and who is not such a one open to calumny? I was determined to reserve my judgment.

In the fifteen minutes allotted me, I was really ready. Suitable arrangements had already been made for the removal of my poor Ada's body to the house that held her love. For the pathos of the situation had touched all hearts, and her wish to be laid to the same grave with him met with no opposition. I could therefore leave with a clear conscience, Mrs. Gannon promising to do all that was necessary, even if she was obliged to take a later train than she had expected to.

Dr. Farnham was in the parlor waiting for me, and uttered a grunt of satisfaction as he saw me enter, fully equipped.

"Come; this is business," he said and led the way at once to his carriage.

We did not speak for the first block. He seemed meditating, and I was summoning up courage for the ordeal before me. For, now that we were started, I began to feel a certain inward trembling not to be entirely accounted for by the fact that I was going into a strange house to nurse a woman of whom report did not speak any too kindly. Nor did the lateness of the hour, and the desolate aspect of the unlighted streets, tend greatly to reassure me. Indeed, something of the weird and uncanny seemed to mingle with the whole situation, and I found myself dreading our approach to the house, which from its old time air and secluded position had always worn for me an aspect of gloomy reserve, that made it even in the day light, a spot of fearful interest.

Dr. Farnham who may have suspected my agitation, though he gave no token of doing so, suddenly spoke up.

"It is only right to tell you," he said "that I should never have accepted the service of an inexperienced girl like you, if anything was necessary but watchfulness and discretion. Mrs. Pollard lies unconscious, and all you will have to do is to sit at her side and wait for the first dawning of returning reason. It may come at any moment, and it may never come at all. She is a very sick woman."

"I understand," I murmured, plucking up heart at what did not seem so very difficult a task.

"Her sons will be within call; so will I. By daybreak we hope to have her daughter from Newport with her. You do not know Mrs. Harrington?"

I shook my head. Who was I, that I should know these grand folks? And yet——But I promised I would say nothing about days now so completely obliterated.

"She will not be much of an assistance," he muttered. "But it is right she should come—quite right."

I remembered that I had heard that Mrs. Pollard's daughter was a beauty, and that she had made a fine match; which, said of Mrs. Pollard's daughter, must have meant a great deal. I, however, said nothing, only listened in a vague hope of hearing more, for my curiosity was aroused in a strange way about these people, and nothing which the good doctor could have said about them would have come amiss at this time.

But our drive had been too rapid, and we were too near the house for him to think of any thing but turning into the gateway with the necessary caution. For the night was unusually dark, and it was difficult to tell just where the gateposts were. We, however, entered without accident, and in another moment a gleam of light greeted us from the distant porch.

"They are expecting us," he said, and touched up his horse. We flew up the gravelled road, and before I could still the sudden heart beat that attacked me at sight of the grim row of cedars which surrounded the house, we were hurrying up between the two huge lions rampant that flanked the steps, to where a servant stood holding open the door.

A sense of gloom and chill at once overwhelmed me. From the interior, which I faintly saw stretching before me, there breathed even in that first moment of hurried entrance a cold and haughty grandeur that however rich and awe-inspiring, was anything but attractive to to a nature like mine.

Drawing back, I let Dr. Farnham take the lead, which he did in his own brusque way. And then I saw what the dim light had not revealed before, a young man's form standing by the newel-post of the wide staircase that rose at our left. He at once came forward, and as the light from the lamp above us fell fully upon him, I saw his face, and started.

Why? I could not tell. Not because his handsome features struck me pleasantly, for they did not. There was something in their expression which I did not like, and yet as I looked at them a sudden sensation swept over me that made my apprehensions of a moment back seem like child's play, and became unpleasant that if a sudden call of life or death were behind me urging me on to the house to such deed as I could not do it while that face was before me to be fathomed, and, if possible, understood.

"Ah, I see you have brought the nurse," were the words with which he greeted Dr. Farnham. And the voice was as thrilling in its tone as the face was in its expression. "But," he suddenly exclaimed, as his eyes met mine, "this is not Mrs. Gannon." And he hurriedly drew the doctor down the hall. "why have you brought this young girl?" he asked, in tones which, however lowered, I could easily distinguish. "Didn't you know there were reasons why we especially wanted an elderly person?"

"No," I heard the doctor say, and then, his back being towards me, I lost the rest of his speech till the words, "She is no gossip," came to astute me and make me ask myself if there was a secret skeleton in this house, that they feared so much the eyes of a stranger.

"But," the young man went hurriedly on, "she is not at all the kind of person to have over my mother. How could we——" and there his voice fell so as to become unintelligible.

But the doctor's sudden exclamation helped me out.

"What?" he wonderingly cried, do you intend to sit up too?"

"I or my brother," was the calm response, "would you expect us to leave her alone with a stranger?"

The doctor made no answer, and the young man, taking a step sidewise, threw me a glance full of anxiety and trouble.

"I don't like it," he murmured; "but there must be a woman of some kind in the room, and a stranger——"

He did not finish his words, but it seemed as if he were going to say: "And a stranger may, after all, be preferable to a neighbor." But I cannot be sure of this, for he was not a man so easy to sound. But what I do know is that he stepped forward to me with an easy grace and giving me a welcome as courteous as if I had been the one of all others he desired to see, led me up the stairs to a room which he announced to be mine, saying, as he left me at the door:

"Come out in five minutes, and my brother will introduce you to your duties."

So far I had seen no woman in the house, and I was beginning to wonder if Mrs. Pollard had preferred to surround herself with males, when the door was suddenly opened and a rosy-cheeked girl stepped in.

"Ah, excuse me," she said, with a stare; "I thought it was the nurse as was here."

"And it is the nurse," I returned, smiling in spite of myself at her look of indignant surprise. "Do you want anything of me?" I hastened to ask, for her eyes were like saucers and her head was tossing airily.

"No," she said, almost with spite. "I came to see if you wanted anything?"

I shook my head with what good nature I could, for I did not wish to make an enemy in this house, even of a chambermaid.

"And you are really the nurse?" she asked, coming nearer and looking at me in the full glare of the gas.

"Yes," I assured her, "really and truly the nurse."

"Well, I don't understand it!" she cried. "I was always Mrs. Pollard's favorite maid, and I was with her when she was took, and would be with her now but they won't let me sit foot inside the door. And when I asked why they kept me out, who was always attentive and good to her, they say I am too young. And here you be younger than I, and a stranger too. I don't like it," she cried tossing her head again and again. "I haven't deserved it, and I think it mighty mean."

I saw the girl was really hurt, so I hastened to explain that I was not the nurse they expected, and was succeeding I think, in mollifying her, when a step was heard in the hall, and she gave a frightened start, and hurried towards the door.

"So you are sure you don't want any thing?" she cried, and was out of my sight before I could answer.

There was nothing to detain me, and I hastened to follow. As I crossed the sill I almost started too, at the sight of the tall, slim, truly sinister figure that awaited me, leaning against the opposite wall. He was younger than his brother and of similar features, but there was no charm there to make you forget that the eyes was darkly glittering, and the lip formidable in its subtlety and power. He advanced with much of the easy nonchalance that had so characterized the other.

"Miss Sterling," I believe, said he; and with no further word, turned and led me down the hall to the sick room. I noticed even then that he paused and listened before he pushed open the door and that with our first step inside he cast a look of inquiry at the bed that had something beside a son's loving anxiety in it. And I hated the man as I would a serpent, though he bowed as he set me a chair, and was careful to move a light he thought shone a little too directly in my eyes.

The other brother was not present, and I could give my undivided attention to my charge. I found her what report had proclaimed her to be, a handsome woman of the sternly imposing type. Even with her set against her and the shadow of death on her brow and cheek, there was something strongly attractive in the lustrous and slightly contracted eyes, and in the stately contour of her form. But it was attractive that was confined to the eye, and could by no means allure the heart, for the same seal of mysterious reserve was upon her that characterized her sons, and in her, as in the younger one of them, it inspired a distrust which I could imagine no smile as dissipating. She lay in a state of coma, and her heavy breathing was the only sound that broke the silence of the great room. "God help me!" I thought; but I had no wish to leave. Instead of that, I felt a fearful pleasure in the prospect before me—such effect had a single look had upon me from eyes I trembled to meet again or read.

I do not know how long I sat there gazing in the one direction for that faint sign of life for which the doctor had bid me watch. That he who inspired me with dread was behind me, I knew; but I would not turn my head towards him. I was determined to resist the power of this man, even if I must succumb a trifle to that of the other.

I was, therefore, surprised when a hand was thrust over my shoulder, and a fan dropped into my lap.

"It is warm here," was the comment which accompanied the action.

I thanked him, but felt that his sole object had been to cover his change of position. For, when he sat down again it was where he could see my face. I therefore felt justified in plying the fan he had offered me, in such a way as to shut off the somewhat basilisk gaze. And so a dreary hour went by.

It was now well on towards morning, and I was beginning to suffer from the anguor natural after so many harrowing excitements, when the door opened behind me, and the electric thrill shooting through all my members, testified as to whose step it was that entered. At the same moment the young man at my side arose, and with what I felt to be a last sharp look in my direction, hastened to where his brother stood, and entered into a whispered conversation with him. Then I heard the dood close again, and almost at the same instant Mr. Hollard the elder advanced, and without seeking an excuse for his action, sat down close by my side. The fan at once dropped. I had no wish to avoid this man's court; joy

And yet when with a secret bracing my nerves I looked up and met his eyes fixed with that baffling expression on mine, I own that I felt an inward alarm; as if something vaguely dangerous had reared itself in my path, which by its very charm instinctively bade me beware. I, however, subdued my apprehensions, thinking, with a certain haughty pride which I fear will never be eliminated from my nature, of the dangers I had already met with and overcome in my brief but troubled life; and meeting his look with a smile which I knew to contain a spice of audacity, I calmly waited for the words I felt to be hovering upon his lips. They were scarcely the ones I expected.

"Miss Sterling," said he, "you have seen Anice, my mother's waiting-maid?"

I bowed. I was too much disconcerted to speak.

"And she has told you her story of my mother's illness?" he went on, pitilessly holding me with his glance. "You need not answer," he again proceeded, as I opened my lips. "I know Anice; she has not the gift of keeping her thoughts to herself."

"An unfortunate thing in this house," I inwardly commented, and made a determination on the spot that whatever emotions I might experience from the mysteries surrounding me, this master of reserve should find there was one who could keep her thoughts to herself, even, perhaps, to his own secret disappointment and chagrin.

"She told you my mother was stricken at the sudden news of Mr. Barrows' death?"

"That was told me," I answered; for this was a direct question, put, too, with an effort I could not help but feel, notwithstanding the evident wish on his part to preserve an appearance of calmness.

"Then some explanation is needed," he remarked, his eyes flashing from his mother's face to mine with equal force and intentness. "My mother"—his words were low, but it was impossible not to hear them—"has not been well since my father died, two months ago. It needed but the slightest shock to produce the result you unhappily see before you. That shock this very girl supplied by the inconsiderate relation of Mr. Barrows' fearful fate. We have taken a prejudice against the girl, in consequence. Do you blame us? This is our mother."

What could I feel or say but No? What could anyone, under the circumstances? Why then did a sudden vision of Ada's face, as she gave me that last look, raise up before me, bidding me remember the name to which I was pledged, and not put too much faith in this man and his plausible explanations?

"I only hope death will not follow the frightful occurrence," he concluded, and do what he would, his features became drawn, and his face white, as his looks wandered back to his mother.

A sudden impulse seized me.

"Another death, you mean," said I, recalling the words I had heard on my first entrance, and which had seemed then so strangely out of place. "Mr. Pollard died—"

"Mr. Pollard!" he repeated, as if he thought I had lost my senses.

"Yes," I went on, with a sinking at the heart at the strangeness of my own words, "I heard the doctor say, on his first entrance, that Mr. Pollard died at the same time as Mr. Barrows."

"What do you mean?" he gasped; and I saw the doctor had refrained from telling him of Ada's pitiful death.

"I mean," said I, with a secret compunction I strove in vain to subdue, "that Mr. Barrows' betrothed could not survive his terrible fate—that she died a few hours since, and will be buried in the same grave as her lover."

"His betrothed?" Young Mr Pollard had risen to his feet, and was actually staggering under the shock of his emotions. "I did not know he had any betrothed. I thought she had jilted him——"

"It is another woman," I broke in, jealous for my poor dead Ada's fame. "The woman he was formerly engaged to never loved him; but this one——" I could not finish the sentence. My own agitation was beginning to master me.

"What was her name?" he asked. "Is it—is it any one I know?" Then, as if suddenly conscious that he was betraying too keen an emotion for the occasion, pitiful as it was, he forced his lips into a steadier curve, and quietly said: "After what has happened here, I am naturally overcome by a circumstance so coincident with our own trouble."

"Naturally," I accented with a bow, and again felt that secret distrust warring with a new feeling that was not unlike compassion.

"Her name is Ada Reynolds," I continued, remembering his last question. "She lived——"

"I know," he interrupted; and without another word walked away, and for a long time stood silent at the other end of the room. Then he came back and sat down, and when I summoned up courage to glance at his face, I saw that a change had passed over it, that in all probability was a change for life.

And my heart sank—sank till I almost envied that unconscious form before which we sat, and from which alone now came the one sound which disturbed the ghastly silence of that dread chamber.

AN IRISH STORY.

All manner of good stories are told at the door of the Sons of Erin, with whom wit and good nature is proverbil. A new one is told which I think is a good one, and will be enjoyed by priests and by members of the congregation. "I heard a story of an Irishman the other day," said a club man to a reporter of the Chicago Mail. "This Irishman was in the habit of going home drunk every night of his life and beating his poor wife Biddy in the good old fashion. He didn't lick her because he disliked her, but just because he thought it the proper thing to do. Finally, however, the patient woman could stand it no longer and appealed to the priest. The reverend father went to her home that evening and waited for Pat. He came, as usual, and the good priest took him in hand.

"Pat," says he, you're drunk."

"Yes, your riverence," says Pat, "I'm feelin' purty good."

"Well, how long is this going to continue I'd like to know?"

"Just as long as I can get a drop of the creatur'," says Pat. "I can't stop drinkin'."

"Now, see here, Pat," said the good father, "I'll tell you what. You'll stop this right here t-night. If you ever get drunk again I'll turn ye into a rat—d'ye mind that? If I don t see ye, I'll know about it just the same whether ye get drunk or not, and if ye do get drunk, into a rat ye go. Now remember that—there's a good man."

The priest went away and Pat was docile that night; but the next night he came home and kicked open the door. One glance showed Biddy that he was full to the hat. She gauged his 'jag' at once, and saw that he was in fighting trim, so she dodged behind the table in an attitude of defence.

"Don't be afraid, darling," said Pat, in a subdued key, as he steadied himself before dropping into a chair. "I'm not goin' to lay the weight of my finger on ye. I want ye to be kind to me to' night, darlin' and to remember if ye kin, the days when we was swatchearts, and when I was always kind to ye and ye loved me. Ye know his rivirence was here last night, and he tould me that if I iver got drunk again he'd turn me into a rat. I'm drunk this minit, darlin': The praste didn't see me, but he knows I'm drunk, and this night into a rat I go. I want ye to be kind to me, darlin', and watch me, and when ye see me gettin' little, and the hair growin' out on me, an' me whiskers getting long, for God's sake, darlin" as ye love me, kape yer eye on the cut.

IT SHINES FOR ALL.

ORANGEVILLE, NOV. 14, 1889.

GOVERNOR TOOLE has called a session of the Montana Legislature for Nov. 25.

THE elections in Newfoundland resulted in the defeat of the Government.

THERE is not to be a dissolution of the Ontario Legislature until another session has been held.

IT is stated the Australia and Turkey will refuse to recognise Ferdinand as Prince of Bulgaria.

PRESIDENT HARRISON has issued a proclamation admitting Montana as a State of the Union.

THE Montreal street railway carried 6,913,000 passengers, in 1887, 7,000,700 in 1888, and 8,000,000 in 1889.

Flags were displayed on the public buildings of Ottawa, on Saturday in honor of the Prince of Wales' birthday.

THE revenue from Chinese Immigration at Vancouver last month was $3,167, compared with $10,999 in October last year.

MR. WIMAN's latest suggestion is that if the United States would put an export duty on coal the National Policy industries in Ontario depending on Pennsylvania for their fuel, would have to shut up or accept commercial union. As he put it, says the Montreal Gazette, "Ontario could be frozen to death by a law of Congress." Commercial union must be nearly frozen to death when it needs such irritants as this to keep life in its stiffening body.

IF the Ontario farmers could grow wealthy under unrestricted reciprocity, says the Orillia Packet, why have not the Vermont farmers grown wealthy? Making every possible allowance for the mania to go west, we cannot believe improved and fertile farms would be allowed to lie idle if anybody could grow wealthy by cultivating them. In Ontario the condition of the farmers is shown by the fact that the value of farm buildings, farm implements and farm stock increases steadily. In Vermont the condition of the farmers is shown by the fact that fertile lands are allowed to lie idle.

IN NEWHAMPSHIRE.—A special meeting of the Hillsboro County Pomona grange, Patrons of Husbandry, convened at Manchester, on the 7th inst., with a large attendance. The object of the gathering was to discuss the abandoned farms of the state and the project to repopulate them by immigration. There was considerable opposition to the immigration idea, the sentiments seeming to be pretty evenly divided. Commissioner of Immigration Batchelder, Governor Goodell and H. H. Metcalf, of Concord, spoke in favor of the scheme, and J. M. Conner, of Hopkinton, president of the State Dairymen's association, John G. Tallant, of East Concord, and E. M. Rollins, of Bedford, opposed it.

THE overthrow of the Newfoundland Government is made more complete with each succeeding day. Four of the ministers are unseated, and of twenty seven members returned the Premier numbers only four supporters. The masses used their strength under the manhood suffrage and the ballot without regard to consequences; and perhaps are not greatly to be wondered at. In the government of Newfoundland the merchants have heretofore been the ruling power, and a very selfish power. Their use of their opportunities was not calculated to fill the democracy with the spirit of statesmanship. Their reverse should teach them a lesson that may benefit not only themselves but the whole colony.

COMMANDER James Dreadnought Leary, of New York, the raft builder, is going to paralyze the old lumbering and sea faring lumber carriers next spring with a raft bigger than the famous Joggins craft. He arrived in St. John N. B., Saturday and went on into the woods to boss the job of getting out stuff for his new raft. His first raft went adrift and broke up at the mouth of Vineyard sound five years ago and was a total loss. Commander Leary promptly built another, 550 foot raft of logs, and had it towed to New York. The raft, for which he has now taken 75 choppers and 50 teams into the woods, will contain 60,000 logs, and will be 750 feet long and 45 wide and 25½ feet deep. It will carry six masts fore and aft rigged, and will have a core of 1,000,000 feet of hard wood. It will be equipped with steam steering gear, and steam capstans will yank its anchor cables. It will start for New York in May.

Samuel Lobley, for whom the police of the United States and Canada have been looking for eight years, was on Monday arrested at New York. Since 1881 Lobley and an accomplice, John Clark, have been traveling through the States and Canada in the garb of Catholic priests and have swindled many big jewelry houses of both countries. Clark was formerly a student at St. Francois Xavier College New York. He is now doing a five years' sentence at Kingston, Ont.

THE BALTIC OUTRAGE.

Two men of the steamer Baltic were on trial at Owen Sound, on Saturday for participating in the outrage on the unfortunate lad Charles Rumbly, and were found guilty at a late hour that evening of assault with intent to do grievous bodily injury. Their names are Thomas Russell and Aaron Tripp, who were sentenced to one years imprisonment each, and Kenneth McPadyen, Geo. Doggett, Chas. Buckbeam and — Peich, who were given six months each. The prisoners disclosed the names of others who were engaged in the affair, and more arrests will be made. An investigation will be made into the conduct of Capt. Robertson, who is alleged to have threatened witnesses for the prosecution.

A NOVEMBER SNOW STORM.

Unless the snow storm which has been raging in Drayton, New Mexico, for eight days comes to an end soon next summer will show a country covered with the dead bodies of animals. The depths of snow is not less that 26 inches on a level, and in many places it has drifted seven feet high. When the storm struck this section seven large herds of cattle, numbering from 400 to 2,000, were being held near this place, awaiting shipment to Eastern markets. The rain of a week ago was followed on Thursday morning by blizzards of snow and sleet, which sent the herds in a southerly direction. In vain did the half frozen cowboys try to check the march of the herds, but on they went through the increasing storm until, finding it utterly impossible to hold the cattle, the cowboys rode aside and allowed them to pass, and when nearly dead rode the exhausted horses into canyons or partially sheltered places, where they passed many hours without food or fire. Five cowboys and two Mexican sheep-herders are known to have been frozen to death. It is estimated that 20,000 sheep have perished in this part of the territory.

The hay supplied is nearly exhausted and $100 per ton is offered by stockmen. At Texline, nine miles below Clayton, two passenger trains have been snowbound for a week. Provisions are running out, and passengers are compelled to venture out in the storm and kill the cattle, the quarters of which are taken into the cars and roasted for food. It is thought the snowplough will reach the imprisoned trains to-day and release them.

A CANADIAN'S CRIME.

MOUNT PLEASANT, Mich., Nov. 12.—At the inquest in the case of Joseph Gaugier, who was shot dead in his own door yard on Saturday night, a very strong chain of circumstantial evidence was thrown around John McWaters, who was arrested on suspicion, and all doubts that may have existed were speedily dispelled by the accused, who confessed to having fired the fatal shot. He says he did it fearing Gaugier and his dog would attack him. The evidence, however, shows there is not the slightest foundation for such an excuse, but that McWaters was offensively abusive and fired the shot probably because he was brutally drunk. The two men were total strangers to each other. McWaters has been held to the Circuit Court for trial. He is 43 years old, a Canadian by birth, born in Montreal. He is married and has seven children. He has been employed by E. Hall, of Detroit, in that lumberman's camps about Mount Pleasant for several years.

Andrew C. Drumm, who is wanted in Kansas City, Mo., on a charge of embezzling $58,000 from his uncle, Major Drumm, was arrested at Toronto on Saturday night. Drumm left Kansas City on July 27th last, and went to London, Eng., returning after some time to Canada with his brother, Oscar J. Drumm. They resided for a few weeks in London, Ont., and then went to Bracebridge, a small town in the northern part of the Province. Andrew Drumm was here met by a young lady from Kansas City, to whom he was married on November 1st. This young lady is said to be Miss Gertie Drumm, a daughter of the man whose money Andy is said to have carried off. The two came to Toronto three days after and registered at the Arlington, where a detective spotted them and made the arrest. Drumm only had about $300 in his possession, and it is thought he may have invested some money in Canada.

Old Mr. Mantle was overjoyed at having his son John, whom he had not seen for 15 years, step off the B. & T. train Monday, and greet him as he stood there looking for another passenger. The friends were all greatly surprised to see him as they supposed him dead for some time. The young man has been living in far off Alaska, and has done well in the salmon fishing business. He will remain here a short time before returning to his fishing interests.—Tilsonburg Liberal.

One day last week Geo. Boddie, a tenant of Deputy-Reeve Fulton, had over $50 worth of sheep worried by dogs, and the trouble is that Mr. Boddie does not know who owns the dogs. After taking the hides off the dead sheep he sprinkled some poison over the carcasses and succeeded in poisoning three foxes and a number of dogs. Now the row is was he justified in setting such a trap. —Harriston Tribune.

There is a man named Grafton living in a small house at Castlemore. He and his wife had been drinking very hard. Yesterday morning when Grafton awoke from his stupor he found the woman lying beside him dead.—Brampton Banner.

A FATAL FLOOD!

AT ALTON

TWO LIVES LOST!

BUILDINGS DEMOLISHED AND DAMS FLOODED AWAY!

CAUSED BY AN INSECURE GATE.

THE peaceful little village of Alton, a distance of five miles from Orangeville, was the scene of an awful catastrophe at half past three o'clock yesterday morning. A telegram to the effect that Alton had been visited by a was received at Mayor Gilchrist's office first thing on Wednesday. The information proved to be only too true.

THE SUN immediately dispatched a reporter to the ill-fated village. When our representative arrived at that place he beheld a spectable that would strike terror to the heart of the average citizen, and a picture of the famous Johnstown flood suddenly rose before him. Every thing appeared to be turned upside down. Piles of broken timbers, household furniture, and an endless variety of articles lie all along the course of the now quiet stream.

The aggregate loss is estimated at between $35,000 and $50,000.

THE CAUSE

of the accident was the bursting of a waste-gate at McClellan Bros.' grist mill, which is situated abo at a mile above the village. The water flowed swiftly down the river and swept away five dams in succession. As each one gave away, the immense volume of water increased, and at Algie's a wall of water twenty feet wide by twenty-five feet high cleaned away everything that it touched.

Houses and other large buildings were carried down by the torrent and dashed to pieces on the rocks and remains of dams; trees were uprooted and heavy machinery sailed along as if it had been so many straws.

But the most sorrowful episode that occurred was the death of Mr. and Mrs. John Harris, an aged couple, who occupied part of a house opposite Meek's flour mills. The unfortunate people were in bed when the avalanche struck their dwelling, and turned it

COMPLETELY AROUND.

They were flooded out of the house and met their death in the tempestuous current. Mrs. Dunbar, who resides near by, was the last person to hear either of them speak. She heard Mrs. Harris cry out: "I'm here; I'm here" Nothing was seen of either of them until about 7 A. M., when a number of rescuers disclosed the lifeless body of Mr. Harris. The remains were under a huge heap of debris on Main street, which runs north and south, parallel to the stream, Mrs. Harris' body has not been recovered yet, although a large party of rescuers are still at work.

The streets were crowded with people from far and near. The topic of conversation was, of course, about the awful calamity that had befallen the village. A large number of hands will be out of employment for some time.

HEAVY LOSERS.

The reporter interviewed nearly all of the principal losers and gives below the result of his labors:

McClellan Bros., millers, waste gate washed away, damage $25.

Mr. Ward, woolen manufacturer, said: My loss will amount to somewhere about $2,000. McClellan Bros. raised the road four feet some time ago so as to make their mill have a greater capacity. I am going to see if I can't take legal proceedings.

Mr. William Algie, of the Beaver woolen mills, said: Our dam has been completely flooded away, but I don't take it as bad as some of the others. Two hours after the accident we had new material ordered. A large stone wall in the mill was knocked down by force of the water, but, strange to say, the outer walls remained unshaken. Our loss is $2,000.

Mr. A. Dick's foundry was all but destroyed. He built a large stone moulding shop this summer, but not a stone of it is left standing. Nearly half of the other extensive stone structure was swept away. Besides this, Mr. D. lost all his patterns, moulding-boxes, 150 cords of wood, etc. He calculates his loss to be $6,000.

Robert Meek, miller, dam destroyed and mill partilly wrecked, loss, about $1-000.

J. McKinnon, proprietor of the Alton flour mills, dam flooded away and mill partly destroyed, loss, $600.

Thos. Harris, cooper, shop, machinery, boiler, engine, saws etc, all very badly damaged. Mr. Harris is a son of the people who met such a horrible death in the flood.

Besides these, several other buildings were swept away. Two bridges in the village were completely destroyed. The under portion of the G. V. R. bridge was also flooded away and traffic had to be suspended.

A number of miraculous escapes are recorded. Mr. Fred. Hill was the first to see the deluge coming. He ran across a foot bridge to alarm his brother, and just as he had taken the last step, the bridge was dashed to atoms.

Mr. and Mrs. Whittam and their two infant children, who lived in the house occupied by the unfortunate Harris family, underwent a thrilling experience. The water flooded into their house while they were in bed. Mr. Whittam leap- [illegible] from the couple, but the remainder [illegible] to which one [illegible] of the cottage. He held one of the children in his arms, and, after the flood had subsided, the other babe was found [illegible] in a corner of the room. Mrs. Whittam received some very severe bruises.

THE OFFERS

and the Orangeville council held a meeting in the Science hall to see what could be done to repair the roads, etc. Relief parties were organized and [illegible] adopted.

Sutherland, and Mr. Wallace and Miss Smith. All are invited.

WHITECAPS AT WORK.—The Orangeville branch of the Order of Whitecaps resumed business at 10:30 on Tuesday night. About two months ago they hung their warning emblem on the door-knob of a south ward wife beater's residence, but that did not keep him from indulging in the "flowing bowl," or breaking his marriage vows. Several members of the "regulators" caught the alcoholicly embarrassed, and celebrated the event by treating him to a cold bath of the pure and sparkling water. After the ceremony, the form of a drenched man could be seen dashing down Mill st. until it was lost in the darkness.

A VERY SERIOUS MISHAP.—At noon on Monday Mr. Noble Wright, proprietor of the North End Dairy, met with an accident that will lay him up for some time. Mr. Wright and his son were drawing a load of turnips home and had a board across the wagon-box for a seat. The former was sitting very close to one end, and the latter stood up to look ahead of the horses. When he did so the end of the seat flew up, and Mr. Wright fell to the road, sustaining very serious injuries. One shoulder was broken, the other dislocated, and two ribs broken.

TEACHERS RE-ENGAGED.—At the regular monthly meeting of the Public School Board on Monday night, Messrs. Armstrong, Reid and Misses Stephens, Smith, Ralph and Ross were re-engaged as teachers for 1890 Mr. Armstrong still fills the position of principal. Four new teachers will be required to complete the teaching staff. Inspector Gordon reported in favor of making another room in the P. S. building. The report was left over until the next meeting. If the report is adopted, another teacher will be required.

THE MAMMOTH.—The Amaranth Mammoth, which is going to enrich science and add to the collection of the museum of the country, will be on exhibition in the store in THE SUN building, East Broadway, to-day, from 9 A. M. to 10 P.M. This Antediluvian monster, which was discovered on the farm of Mr. W. B. Jelly, has staggered scientists on account of its immense size. A tooth weights 16¾ lbs., the horn or tusk measures 12 feet 8 inches in length, 8 inches in diameter at the butt, and weighs upwards of 200 lbs.; the ribs are 50 inches in length and 11 inches in circumference. Don't fail to see these wonders. Admission, 10 cents.

SHOT IN THE SPINE.—On Thanksgiving day a party of Toronto sports came up to Caledon for a day's shooting. They succeeded in bagging a large number of hare etc., and were returning to take the evening train for the Queen City. Before starting, however, they took the precaution to unload their guns, and were walking over Mr. John Armstrong's farm, about three miles from Orangeville, accompanied by one of Mr. Armstrong's sons. Mr. Geo. Davies, one of the party, was in advance of the others, and, while stooping to get under a bar of the gate, was accidently shot in the back, by Robert Quigley, who thought his gun wasn't loaded. The wounded man was taken to his home in Toronto in the evening, where he still lies in a precarious condition.

"If a woman is pretty,
To me 'tis no matter,
Be she blonde or brunette,
So she lets me look at her."

An unhealthy woman is rarely, if ever, beautiful. The peculiar diseases to which so many of the sex are subject, are prolific causes of pale sallow faces, blotched with unsightly pimples, dull, lustreless eyes and emaciated forms. Women so afflicted, can be permanently cured by using Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription; and with the restoration of health comes that beauty which, combined with good qualities of head and heart, makes women angels of loveliness.

WARRANTED. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. It is a positive specific for all those painful disorders, irregularities and weaknesses with which so many women are afflicted.

CATARRH,

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

The Browns.

Brown has a home full of girls and boys,
Rosy and healthy and full of noise.
They are sprightly at work and bright at their books,
And are noted for smartness and wit and good looks.
Brown is healthy, his wife is fair,
And their faces are free from wrinkles of care
They spend no money for powders and pills,
And never a dollar for doctor's bills.

The reason is that they begin in the right place. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, by keeping the springs of life pure, the blood free from impurities, wards off all of those diseases which spring from bad blood. The use of the "Discovery" prevents liver and kidney troubles, dyspepsia, consumption or lung scrofula, stomach and bowel troubles, and forestalls the beginning of disease. That is why the Browns are so healthy. It is also guaranteed to cure these ailments if taken in time and given a fair trial, or money paid for it will be refunded.

Another new case of smallpox has developed on Pelee Island.

ALL SORTS OF MEN.

There's the boasting man,
And the toasting man,
And the man that thinks he knows;
The man that's foolish,
And the man that's mulish,
And the man that wears dude clothes.

There's the dreamer man,
And the "hummer" man,
And the man with the killing air;
The man that smokes,
And the man that jokes,
And the man that hangs his hair.

There's the gentle man,
And the "mental" man,
And the man that's very proud;
The man that's meek,
And the man with cheek
And the man that makes a "crowd."

There's the fussy man,
And the mussy man,
And the man that seems all collar;
There's the man that's "hazy,"
And the man that's lazy,
And the man that "hunts the dollar."

There's the scowling man,
And the growling man,
And the man that's a dreadful talker.
There's the man that's neat,
And the man discreet,
And the man that's a splendid walker.

There's the lover man,
And the "brother" man,
And the man whom nobody knows;
The man that's dashy,
And the man that's flashy,
And the man that upright goes.

They are not all here,
O sisters dear,
There are many, many others;
There are men and men,
Yet five in ten
Are true and noble brothers.

AFTER.

After the storm, the calm,
After the bruise, the balm;
After the pang, the bliss,
After the tear, the kiss;
After the battle,—rest!
The good Lord knoweth best!

After the darkness, light,
After the blindness, sight;
After the doubt, belief,
After the pain, relief;
After the weakness, strength,
And the grace of God at length!

After the quicksand's, clay,
After December, May;
After the fever, sleep,
Solemn and sweet and deep;
After the race the prize,
And the doors of Paradise!

There is no more fruitful source of disease than vitiated blood. It involves every organ and function of the body, and if not immediately corrected by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, sooner or later leads to fatal results. Be warned in time.

DR. BRODIE'S
ST. HOSPITAL REMEDIES ST.
WILL GIVE YOU
HEALTH!
A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have hospitals devoted to curing with suffering humanity. Crowds of patients throng the wards daily, and the best medical talent in these hospitals is employed in the treatment of the various diseases with which humanity is afflicted. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are supplied with all the appliances of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absorb it in every ill from a single bottle. The great plunge fact for a reliable class of domestic remedies is now filled with perfect satisfaction. The Hospital Remedies make no unreasonable claims. The specific for CATARRH cures that, and nothing else; so with the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLES; RHEUMATISM is cured by No. 3, while troubles of DIGESTION, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their own cure. To these add a specific for FEVER and AGUE, one for FEMALE WEAKNESS—a GENERAL TONIC and BLOOD MAKER that makes blood and GIVES FORM AND FULNESS, and an incomparable remedy for NERVOUS DEBILITY.

No. 1—CURES CATARRH, HAY FEVER, ROSE COLD, CATARRHAL DEAFNESS.—The only authentic cure emanating from scientific sources now before the public. This is not a snuff or ointment—both are discarded as injurious. $1.00.

No. 2—COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION—An incomparable remedy; does not merely stop a cough, but eradicates the disease and strengthens the lungs and restores wasted tissues. $1.00.

No. 3—RHEUMATISM AND GOUT—A distinguished and well-known specialist in this disease in Paris, who treats nothing else, built his reputation on this remedy. $1.00.

No. 4—LIVER AND KIDNEYS, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, CONSTIPATION and BRIGHT'S DISEASE—A favorite stomachic—fluid—for the quack who has ruined more stomachs than alcohol. Use a remedy sanctioned in high places. $1.00.

No. 5—FEVER AND AGUE; DUMB AGUE, MALARIA, NEURALGIA—Fear away most great damage this gives the system; it is treated to break it for a time. Use a remedy that eradicates it. $1.

No. 6—FEMALE WEAKNESS, IRREGULARITIES, WHITES—Many women are broken down because they neglect these diseases until chronic and seated. Use No. 6 and regain health and strength. $1.00.

No. 7—HEALTH, FORM AND FULNESS depend on good blood and lots of it. If weak, if blood is poor, if wasting, use this perfect tonic. $1.00.

No. 8—NERVOUS DEBILITY, LOSS OF POWER—A sound curative public will hail a genuine remedy for an unfortunate condition. No. 8 is positive, within one trial, will prove. Beware of spurious quacks who charge $5 a box for their drugs and worthless drugs and pills, the properties of which they are utterly ignorant, and who expose you by selling your confidential letters to others in the same unprincipled business. Use No. 8 and live again. $1.00.

TO BE HAD OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

If your Druggist does not keep these remedies send money to us and we will supply you direct. Now listen! Take no other remedy, but choose quick instead of sickness and pain, use instead these high-class Hospital Remedies which emanate from scientific sources, and thus prolong your life.

APPLE BUTTER.

To forty gallons of good sweet cider, made from sound, ripe apples, use three bushels of select apples. The cider should be boiled down to one-third or less before putting in the apples, which should be pared clean, all specks, bruises, seeds and seed cavities removed. They may be quartered, or cut into eighths, if very large. Stirring should commence as soon as fruit gets soft, and be kept up carefully until done. At all times prevent the flames of fire striking the kettle above the line of contents. When boiled down to ten gallons it will be done, and will be an article fit for a king. Put in earthen vessels, and when cold, dip clean white paper into good whiskey or brandy, and lay it over the tops. In four months from making, if kept in a garret (the best place), the jars can be inverted on a floor or shelf without running out. Will keep for years, and if made with the right kind of apples, such as Rambo, Smokehouse or Bellflower, will become as smooth as cheese.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—In all outward complaints a desperate effort should be made to at once remove these annoying infirmities, and of establishing a cure. The remarkable remedies discovered by Professor Holloway will satisfactorily accomplish this desirable result, without any of those dangers or drawbacks which attend the old method of treating ulcerative inflammations scrofulous affections, and scorbutic eruptions. The most timid invalids may use both the Ointment and Pills with the utmost safety with certain success, provided a moderate attention be bestowed on their accompanying "Directions." Both the preparations soothe, heal, and purify. The one assists the other materially in effecting cures and renewing strength by helping exhausted nature just when she needs such succour.

A petition to the Governor General is being circulated in Essex Centre and vicinity, praying for a commutation of sentence in the case of Benjamin Mc Mahon, sentenced to be hanged in Chatham on Friday, December 13th, for the murder of Holton. It is being largely signed.

The combination of ingredients found in Ayer's Pills renders them tonic and curative as well as cathartic. For this reason they are the best medicine for people of costive habit, as they restore the natural action of the bowels, without debilitating.

Mr. Joseph Guy was suddenly attacked with sickness on Wednesday while smoking a cigar at the G. T. R. depot. Dr. Heggie attended him and pronounced poisoning the cause. Up to the time of going to press his condition had not improved; the patient being most of the time delirious.—Brampton Times.

Thirty Years Ago.

OVER 30 years ago there was placed upon the market a remedy designed to relieve pain and capable of either external or internal use. From the first it has had wonderful success, and hundreds testify that Hagyard's Yellow Oil cures rheumatism, sore throat, sprains, croup cuts, bruises and all pains and aches.

Its superior excellence proves a million of homes for more than a quarter of a century. It is used by the United States Government. Endorsed by the heads of the Great Universities as the Strongest, Purest and most Healthful. Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder does not contain Ammonia, Lime or Alum. Sold only in cans.

THE GALE SULKY HARROW M'F'G. COMPANY,
OF WINDSOR, ONTARIO,

Have a company of men and eight waggons now working in this vicinity. They are making Orangeville headquarters, and the Farmers of this vicinity should see their machine work before purchasing anything in that line, as all who have used the GALE pronounce it a grand success. Their manner of doing business is such that it meets all the requirements of the times. They take their machine on a man's farm, show him how it does its work, and allow him to judge for himself.

We respectfully call your attention to a few of the many testimonials received from our patrons:

Euphrasia, June 22, 1889.
Gale Sulky Harrow Co.
Gentlemen,—This is to certify that I bought one of your combined Harrows and Seeders and have used it to sow 15 acres of oats and barley, which is now up and looking first class. It looks much better than grain sown along side of it, with a drill I think it is the proper way to sow grain to get the best results.
Yours truly,
DANIEL BATH.

Erin, Ont, Aug. 1889.
Gale Sulky Harrow Co.,
Windsor, Ont.
Sirs,—This is to certify that I bought one of your combined Harrows and Cultivators about twelve months ago and have worked it on all kinds of ground, some of it so sody that I could not work my broadcast seeder, but the Gale made a first class job. I am well pleased with it in every respect.
Yours,
GEORGE B. HURD.

Dear Sir,—I have pleasure in certifying that we purchased a Gale Harrow and Seeder for use on this farm, have tried it thoroughly in various soils and conditions and are well satisfied with the work it does. Respectfully,
JAMES MILLS, Pres. Ont. Ag. College
Caledon, Aug 22 1889.
The Gale Sulky Harrow Co.
Sirs—This is to certify that I purchased one of your Harrows and Seeders last year and have used it to cultivate and sow sixty acres of crop, and am well pleased with the way it did the work.
WM. T. DAVIDSON, Alton P.O.
Artemesia, May 13th, 1889
To the Gale Sulky Harrow Co.
Dear Sirs,—I purchased one of your Sulky Harrows and Seeders after testing it thoroughly. Altho' I had a drill that cost me $85 and a set of Spring Tooth Harrows that cost me $20, I consider the Gale the best machine in the market, and have no hesitation in recommending it to my farmer friends. Your &c.
ROBERT OLIVER.

Markdale, Ont., June 27, 1889.
Gale Sulky Harrow Co., Windsor, Ont.
Gentlemen,—I bought one of your Sulky Harrows and Seeders on May the 8th, and have used it to sow 20 acres of grain, (15 of oats and 5 of peas) that is now up, and I can say that I never saw grain more evenly sown. I also sowed my grass seed at the same time and consider your Grass Seeder perfection. I used the cultivator on my potato ground, where the thistles were very thick and it did a first class job. I think you have the best general purpose machine ever introduced in this section.
Yours respectfully,
R. W. BLAKELY,

Gentlemen,—I bought one of your Sulky Harrows and Seeders and have used it to prepare and sow nineteen acres of grain that is now up and looking first class. I never saw grain more evenly sown, and am well pleased with the Gale in every respect. I used the cultivator to prepare five acres of very rough sod ground where the cradle knolls were thick and it did the work to perfection.
Yours respectfully,

Dear Sirs,—I have bought one of your combined Harrows and Seeders. I have used it only on spring plowed sod, as yet it gives me entire satisfaction and think it far ahead of anything I have saw yet for sod as, with your adjustable frame there is no possibility of clogging or turning back sods and still it cuts so to make a first class seed bed.
Yours truly,
A. E. WELLER,
Duncan P. O.

Dear Sir,—I bought one of your Sulky Harrows and Seeders over one year ago. I used it last spring to cultivate 40 acres of fall plowing and think it is far superior to a gang plow. I also used it on sod and consider it the best sod harrow I ever saw. I have used your seeder to sow 40 acres of grain—peas, oats, barley and wheat—and I never saw grain better or more evenly sowed and can recommend it as the best seed sower in the market. I have used a drill for some years, but consider the Gale the best general purpose machine ever introduced in this neighborhood, and in fact it does all your agent claimed for it, and I would not be without one for any reasonable price.
Yours truly, DAVID WOODS.

Dear Sirs,—I bought one of your Sulky Harrows and Seeders and have used it to sow 25 acres of oats and 5 acres of peas that is now up and looking fine. I never saw grain sown better or more evenly, and after testing your machine in the different kinds of work I must say that I consider it the BEST general purpose machine ever introduced in this neighborhood; I also think it the cheapest machine in the market and would not take $100 for mine if I could not get another like it. Yours truly,
FREDRICK EAGLES,

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 70 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. Furbush, Haverhill, Mass.

PREPARED BY Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Lowell, Mass. Price $1; six bottles, $5. Worth $5 a bottle.

Poetry.

UNDER THE VIOLETS.

Her hands are cold, her face is white;
No more her pulses come and go;
Her eyes are shut to life and light;
Fold thy light vesture, snow on snow,
And lay her where the violets blow.

But beneath a graven stone,
To plead for tears with alien eyes;
A slender cross of wood alone
Shall say that here a maiden lies
In peace beneath the peaceful skies.

And gray old trees of hugest limb
Shall wheel their circling shadows round,
To make the scorching sunlight dim
That drinks the greenness from the ground
And drop their dead leaves on the mound.

For her the morning choir will sing
Its matins from the branches high,
And every minstrel voice of spring
That thrills beneath the April sky,
Shall greet her with its earliest cry.

At last the rootlets of the trees
Shall find the prison where she lies,
And bear the buried dust they seize
In leaves and blossoms to the skies:
So may the soul that warms it rise.

If any, born of kindlier blood,
Should ask; "What maiden lies below?"
Say only this: "A tender bud
That tried to blossom in the snow
Dies withered where the violets blow."

CHAPTER V.

DOUBTS AND QUERIES.

And that well might
Advise him to a caution, to hold what distance
His wisdom can provide.—MACBETH.

At daybreak the doctor came in. Taking advantage of the occasion, I slipped away for a few minutes to my own room, anxious for any change that would relieve me from the gloom and oppression caused by this prolonged tete a tete with a being that at once so interested and repelled me. Observing that my windows looked towards the east, I hastened to throw wide the blinds and lean out into the open air. A burst of rosy sunlight greeted. "Ah!" thought I, "if I have been indulging in visions, this will dispel them;" and I quaffed deeply and long of the fresh and glowing atmosphere before allowing my thoughts to return to the strange and harrowing experiences I had just been through. A sense of rising courage and renewed power rewarded me; and blessing the Providence that had granted us a morning of sunshine after a night of so much horror, I sat down and drew from my breast the little paper which represented my poor Ada's will. Opening it with reverent love which I felt for her memory, I set myself to decipher the few trembling lines which she had written, in the hope they would steady my thought and suggest, if not reveal, the way I should take in the more than difficult path I saw stretching before me.

My agitation my be convinced when I read the following:

"It is my last wish that all my personal effects, together with the sum of five hundred dollars, now credited to my name in the First National Bank of S——, should be given to my friend, Constance Sterling, who, I hope will not forget the promise I exacted from her."

Five hundred dollars! and yesterday I had nothing. Ah, yes, I had a friend!

The thoughts awakened by this touching memorial from the innocent dead distracted me for a few moments from further consideration of present difficulties, but soon the very nature of the bequest recalled them to my mind, by that allusion to a promise which more than anything else lay at the bottom of the dilemma in which I found myself. For, humiliating as it is to confess, the persistency with which certain impressions remained in my mind, in spite of the glowing daylight that now surrounded me, warned me that it would be for my peace to leave this house before my presentiments became fearful realities; while on the other hand my promise to Ada seemed to constrain me to remain in it till I had at least solved some of those mysteries of emotion which connected one and all of this family so intimately with the cause to which I had pledged myself.

"If the general verdict in regard to Mr. Barrows' death should be one of suicide," thought I, "how could I reconcile myself to the fact that I had fled at the first approaching intimation that all was not as simple in his relations as was supposed, and that somewhere, somehow, in the breast of certain parishioners of his, a secret lay hidden, which, if known, would explain the set which otherwise might imprint an ineffaceable stain upon his memory?"

My heart and brain were still busy with this question when the sounds of Mr. Pollard's footsteps passing my door recalled me to a sense of my present duty. Rising, I hurried across the hall to the sick-chamber, and was just upon the point of entering, when the doctor appeared before me, and seeing me, motioned me back, saying:

"Mrs. Harrington has just arrived. As she will doubtless wish to see her mother at once, you had better wait a few moments till the first agitation is over."

Glad of any respite, and particularly glad to escape an introduction to Mrs. Harrington at this time, I slipped hastily away, but had not succeeded in reaching my room before the two brothers and the sisters appeared at the top of the stairs. I had thus a full opportunity of observing them, and being naturally quick to gather impressions, took in with a glance the one member of the Pollard family who was likely to have no mystery about her. I found her pretty; prettier perhaps, than any woman it had ever been my lot to meet before, but with a doll's prettiness that bespoke but little dignity or force of mind. Dressed with faultless taste and with an attention to detail that at a moment like the present struck one with a sense of painful incongruity, she advanced, a breathing image of fashion and perhaps folly; her rustling robes, and fresh, if troubled face offering a most striking contrast to the gloom and reserve of the two sombre figures that walked at her side.

Knowing as by instinct that nothing but humiliating would follow any obtrusion of myself upon this petted darling of fortune, I had withdrew as much as possible into the shadow, receiving for my reward a short look from both the brothers; the one politely deprecating in its saturnine courtesy, the other full of a bitter demand for what I in my selfish egotism was fain to consider sympathy. The last look did not tend to calm my already disturbed thoughts, and, anxious to efface its impression I impulsively descended the stairs and strolled out on the lawn, asking myself what was meant by the difference in manner which I had discerned in these two brothers towards their sister. For while the whole bearing of the younger had expressed interest in this pretty, careless butterfly of a woman thus brought suddenly face to face with a grave trouble, the elder had only averted looks to offer, and an arm that seemed to shrink at her touch as if the weight of her light hand on his was almost more than he could bear. Could it be that affection and generosity were on the side of the younger after all, and that in this respect, at least, he was the truer man and more considerate brother?

I could find no more satisfactory answer for this question than for the many others that had suggested themselves since I had been in this house; and being determined not to allow myself to fall into a reverie which at this moment might be dangerous, I gave up consideration of all kinds, and yielded myself wholly to the pleasure of my ramble. And it was a pleasure! For however solemn and austere might be the interior of the Pollard mansion, without here on the lawn all was cheerfulness, bloom, and verdure; the grim row of cedars encircling the house seeming to act as a barrier beyond which its gloom and secrecy could not pass. At all events such was the impression given to my excited fancy at the time, and, filled with the sense of freedom which this momentary escape from the house and its influences had caused, I hastened to enjoy the beauties of the walk and parterre, stopping only when some fairer blossom than ordinary lured me from my path to inspect its loveliness or inhale its perfume.

The grounds were not large, though, situated as they were in the midst of a thickly populated district, they appeared so. It did not, therefore, take me long to exhaust their attractions, and I was about to return upon my course, when I espied a little summer-house before me, thickly shrouded in vines. Thinking what a charming retreat it offered, I stepped forward to observe it more closely, when to my great surprise I saw it was already occupied, and by a person whose attitude and appearance were such as to at once arouse my strongest curiosity. This person was a boy, slight of build, and fantastic in his dress, with a face of sculptured marble, and an eye which, if a little contracted, had a strange glitter in it that made you look and look again. He was kneeling on the floor of the summer-house, and his face, seen by me in profile, was turned with the fixedness of an extreme absorption towards a small opening in the vines, through which he was intently peering. What he saw or wished to see I could not imagine, for nothing but the blank end of the house lay before him, and there could be very little which was interesting in that, for not one of its windows were open, unless you except the solitary one in my room. His expression, however, showed that he was engaged in watching something, and by the corrugation in his white brow and the peculiar compression of his fresh red lip, that something showed itself to be of great importance to him; a fact striking enough in itself if you consider the earliness of the hour and the apparent immaturity of his age, which did not appear to be more that fourteen.

Resolved to solve this simple mystery, I gave an admonitory cough, and stepped into the summer-house. He at once started to his feet, and faced me with a look I am pondering on yet, there was so much in it that was wrathful, curious, dismayed, and defiant. The next moment a veil seemed to fall over his vision, the rich red lip relaxed from its expressive curve, and from being one of the most startling visions I ever saw, he became—what? It would be hard to tell, only not a fully responsible being, I am sure, however near he had just strayed to the border-land of judgment and good sense.

Relieved, I scarcely knew why, and remembering almost at the same instant some passing gossip I had once heard about the pretty imbecile boy that ran the streets of S——, I gave him a cheerful smile, and was about to bestow some encouraging word upon him, when he suddenly broke into a laugh, and looking at me with a meaningless stare, asked:

"Who are you?"

"I was willing enough to answer, so I returned: "I am Constance Sterling", and almost immediately added: "And who are you?"

"I am the cat that mews in the wall." Then suddenly, "Do you live here?"

"No," I replied, "I am only staying here. Mrs. Pollard is sick——"

"Do they like you?"

The interruption was quick, like all his speech, and caused me a curious sensation. But I conquered it with a laugh, and cheerily replied:

"As I only came last night it would be hard to say"—and was going to add more, when the curious being broke out:

"She only came last night!" and, repeating the phrase again and again, suddenly darted from my side on to the lawn, where he stood for an instant, murmuring and laughing to himself before speeding away through the shrubbery that led to the gate.

This incident, trivial as it seemed, made a vivid impression upon me, and it was with a mind really calmed from its past agitation that I re-entered the house and took up my watch in the sick room. I found everything as I had left it an hour or so before, with the exception of my companion; the younger Mr. Pollard having taken the place of his brother. Mrs. Harrington was nowhere to be seen but as breakfast had been announced I did not wonder at this, nor at the absence of the elder son, who was doubtless engaged in doing the honors of the house.

My own call to breakfast came sooner than I anticipated; soon enough, indeed for me to expect to find Mr. Pollard and his sister still at the table. It therefore took some courage for me to respond to the summons, especially as I had to go alone, my companion, of course, refusing to leave his mother. But a glance at the hall-mirror, as I went by, encouraged me, for it was no weak woman's face I encountered and if Mrs. Harrington was as beautiful as she was haughty, and as haughty as she was beautiful, Constance Sterling at least asked no favors and showed no embarrassment. Indeed, I had never felt more myself than when I lifted the portiere from before the dining-room door and stepped in under the gaze of these two contradictory beings, either of whom exerted an influence calculated to overawe a person in my position. The past—— But what have I promised myself and you? Not the past, then, but my present will and determination made the ordeal easy.

Mr. Pollard, who is certainly a man to attract any woman's eye rose gravely as I approached, and presented me, with what struck me as a somewhat emphasized respect, to his sister. Her greeting was nothing more nor less than what I expected—that is, indifferently civil,—though I thought I detected a little glimmer of curiosity in the corner of her eye, as if some words passed in regard to me that made her anxious to know what sort of a woman I was.

But my faculty for observation was very wide-awake that morning, and I may have imagined this, especially as she did not look at me again till she had finished her breakfast and rose to quit the room. Then, indeed, she threw me a hurried glance, half searching, half doubtful in its character, as if she hesitated whether she ought to leave us alone together. Instantly a wild thrill passed through me, and I came perilously near blushing. But the momentary emotion, if emotion it could be called, was soon lost in the deeper feeling which ensued when Mrs. Harrington, pausing at the door, observed with a forced lightness:

"By the-way, where is Mr. Barrows? I thought he was always on hand in time of trouble."

"I looked at her; somehow, I dared not look at her brother; and, while making to myself such trivial observations as, "She has not been told the truth and, "They took good care she should overhear no gossip at the station," I was in wardly agitating myself with the new thought, "Can she have had anything to do with Mr. Barrows? Can she be the woman he was engaged to before he fell in love with Ada?"

The expression of her face, turned though it was full upon us, told nothing, and my attention, though not my glances passed to Mr. Pollard, who, motionless in his place, hesitated what reply to give to this simple question.

"Guy has not told you, then," said he, "what caused the shock that has prostrated our mother?"

"No," she returned, coming quickly back.

"It was the news of Mr. Barrows' death, Agnes; the servants say so, and the servants ought to know."

"Mr. Barrows' death! Is Mr. Barrows dead, then?" she asked, in a tone of simple wonder, which convinced me that my surmise of a moment ago was without any foundation. "I did not know he was sick," she went on. "Was his death sudden, that it should affect mother so?"

"A short and was all her brother seemed to be able to give to this question. At sight of it I felt the cold chills run through my veins, and wished that fate had not obliged me to be present at this conversation.

"How did Mr. Barrows die?" queried Mrs. Harrington, after waiting in manifest surprise and impatience for her brother to speak.

"He was drowned."

"Drowned?"

"Yes."

"When?"

"Yesterday."

"Where?"

This time the answer was not forthcoming. Was it because he knew the place too well? I dared not lift my eyes to see.

"Was it in the mill-stream?" she asked.

This time he uttered a hollow "No" Then, as if he felt himself too weak to submit to this cross questioning, he pushed back his chair, and, hurriedly rising, said:

"It is a very shocking affair, Agnes. Mr. Barrows was found in a vat in the cellar of the old mill he drowned himself. No one knows his motive."

"Drowned himself?" Did she speak or I? I saw her lips move and I heard the words uttered as I thought in her voice; but it was to me he directed his look, and to me he seemed to reply:

"Yes; how else account for the circumstances? Is he a man to have enemies?—or is that a place a man would be likely to seek for pleasure?"

"But——" the trembling little woman at my side began.

"I say it is a suicide," he broke in, imperiously, giving his sister one look and then settling his eyes back again upon my face. "No other explanation fits the case, and no other explanation will ever be given. Why he should have committed such a deed," he went on in a changed voice, and after a momentary pause, "it would be impossible for me, and perhaps for any other man, to say; but that he did do it is evident, and that is all I mean to assert. The rest I leave for wiser heads than mine." And turning from me with an indescribable look that to my reason, if not to my head, seemed to belie his words, he offered his arm to his bewildered sister and quietly led her towards the door.

The breath of relief I gave as the portiere closed behind them was, however premature, for scarcely had he seen her on her way up stairs when he came back, and taking his stand directly before me said:

"You and I do not agree on this question; I see it in your eyes. Now what explanation do you give of Mr. Barrows' death?"

The suddenness of the attack brought the blood to my cheeks, while the necessity of answering drove it as quickly away. He I saw was agitated, and a slight tremble—it could not be called a smile—disturbed the set contour of his lips. The sight of it gave me courage. I let my own curl as I replied:

"You do me too much honor to ask my opinion. But since you wish to know what I think, I consider it only justice to say that it would be easier for an unprejudiced mind to believe that Mr. Barrows had a secret enemy, or that his death was owing to some peculiar and perhaps unexplainable accident, than that he should seek it himself, having, as he did, every reason for living."

"He was very happy, then?" murmured my companion, looking for an instant away, as if he could not bear the intensity of my gaze.

"He loved deeply a noble woman; they were to have been married in a month; does that look like happiness?" I asked.

The roving eye came back, fixed itself upon me, and turned dangerously dark and deep.

"It looks like it," he emphasized, and a strange smile passed over his lips, the utter melancholy of which was all that was plain to me.

"And it was!" I persisted, determined not to yield an iota of my convictions to the persuasiveness of this man. "The woman who knew him best declared it to be so as she was dying; and I am forced to trust in her judgment, what ever the opinion of others may be."

"But happy men——" he began.

"Sometimes meet with accidents," I completed.

"And your credulity is sufficient to allow you to consider Mr. Barrows' death as the result of accident?"

Lightly as the question was put, I felt that nothing but a deep anxiety had prompted it, else why that earnest gaze from which my own could not falter, or that white line showing about the lip he essayed in vain to steady? Recoiling inwardly, though I scarcely knew why, I forced myself to answer with the calmness of an inquisitor:

"My credulity is not sufficient for me to commit myself to that belief. If investigation should show that Mr. Barrows had an enemy——"

"Mr. Barrows had no enemy!" flashed from Mr. Pollard's lips. "I mean," he explained, with instant composure, "that he was not a man to awaken jealousy or antagonism; that, according to all accounts, he had the blessing, and not the curning, of each man in the community."

"Yes," I assayed.

"He never came to his death through the instrumentality of another person," broke in Mr. Pollard, with a stern insistence. "He fell into the vat intentionally or unintentionally, but no man put him there. Do you believe me, Miss Sterling?"

Did I believe him? Was he upon trial, then, and was he willing I should see he understood it? No, no, that could not be; yet why answerable so emphatically a fact of which no man could be sure unless he had been present at the scene of death, or at least known more of the circumstances attending it than was compatible with the perfect ignorance which all men profess to have of them. Did he not see that such words were calculated to awaken suspicion, and that it would be harder, after such a question, to believe he spoke from simple conviction, than from a desire to lead captive the will of a woman whose intuitions, his troubled conscience told him, were to be feared? Rising, as an intuition that the conversation was fast becoming insupportable to me, I confronted him with my proudest look.

"You must excuse me," said I, "if I do not linger to discuss a matter whose consequences just now are more important to us than the fact itself. While your mother lies insensible I cannot rest comfortable away from her side. You will therefore allow me to return to her."

"In a moment," he replied. "There are one or two questions it would please me to have you answer first." And his manner took on a charm that robbed his words of all peremptoriness, and made it difficult, if not impossible, for me to move. "You have spoken of Miss Reynolds," he resumed; "have told me she declared upon her dying bed that the relations between Mr. Barrows and herself were very happy. Were you with her then? Did you know her well?"

"She was my room mate," I returned.

"It was a blow; I saw it, though not a muscle of his face quivered. He had not expected to hear that I was upon terms of intimacy with her.

"I loved her," I went on, with a sense of cruel pleasure that must have sprung from the inward necessity I felt to struggle with this strong nature. "The proof that she loved me lies in the fact that she has made me heir to all her little savings. We were friends," I added, seeing he was not yet under sufficient control to speak.

"I see," he now said, moving involuntarily between me and the door. "And by friends you mean confidantes, I presume?"

"Perhaps," I answered, coolly, dropping my eyes.

His voice took a deeper tone; it was steel meeting steel, he saw.

"And she told you Mr. Barrows was happy?"

"That has been already discussed," said I.

"Miss Sterling,"—I think I never heard such music in a human voice—"you think me inquisitive, presuming, ungentlemanly, precistant, perhaps. But I have a great wish to know the truth about this matter, if only to secure myself from forming false impressions and wrongfully influencing others by them. Bear with me, then, strangers though we are, and if you feel you can trust me"—here he forced me to look at him,—"let me hear, I pray, what reason you have for declaring so emphatically that Mr. Barrows did not commit suicide?"

"My reasons, Mr. Pollard? Have I not already given them to you? Is it necessary for me to repeat them?"

"No," he earnestly rejoined, charming me, whether I would or not, by the subtle homage he infused into his look, "if you will assure me that you have no others—that the ones you have given form the sole foundation for your conclusions. Will you?" he entreated; and while his eyes demanded the truth, his lip took curve which it would have been better for me not to have seen, if I wished to preserve unmoved my position as grand inquisitor.

I was compelled, or so it seemed to me, to answer with reserve. I therefore returned a quite affirmative, adding only in qualification of the avowal, "What other reasons were necessary?"

"None, none," was the quick reply, "for you to believe as you do. A woman but proves her claim to our respect when she attaches such significance to the master passion as to make it the argument of a perfect happiness."

I do not think he spoke in sarcasm; though to most minds it might appear so. I think he spoke in relief, a joyous relief, that was less acceptable to me at that moment than the sarcasm would have been. I therefore did not blush, but rather grew pale, as with a bow I acknowledged his words, and took my first step toward the doorway.

"I have wounded you," he murmured, softly, following me.

"You do not know me well enough," I answered, turning with a sense of victory in the midst of my partial defeat.

"It is a misfortune that can be remedied," he smiled.

"Your brother waits for us," I suggested, and, lifting the portiere out of his hand, I passed through, steady as a dart, but quaking, oh, how fearfully

A GOOD IDEA.

At the last meeting of the town council Ald. J. S. Youmans introduced a by law providing for the holding of nominations, both municipal and school trustee, at the same time and place.

The idea is a good one, and would save a great deal of trouble and expense. We believe that holding all the nominations as specified in the by-law would give more general satisfaction.

Sentences of five years' imprisonment have been imposed on three mail clerks in Ottawa district for stealing money from letters.

Mr. Henry Rogers, of Toronto, has taken an action for $15,000 against the Canadian Express Co., for the death of his son, an express messenger, caused by the explosion of fireworks in one of the company's cars.

The proposal to establish a negro colony in Mexico is not regarded with favour by the people, who think that in the peon class Mexico has as large an element of a different race as is desirable.

The result of the West Lambton election, which took place on Monday, was no surprise to anyone. As was expected, Mr. Mowat's candidate carried the day. The conservative standard-bearer did well, and the Third Party man was third. But wait until the general elections, and see how deep Mr. Mowat and his candidates will be in the mire.

A Deputation arrived at Ottawa from Guelph on Tuesday, and presented a petition, signed by 3,270 persons, to Sir John Thompson, Minister of Justice praying for the commutation of the sentence of death passed upon W. H. Harvey. The Minister promised to carefully consider the matter, and the chances are, Harvey's sentence will be commuted.

The Lunkenheimer Brass Manufacturing Company, of Cincinnati, is using a novel means of presenting its specialties to customers, by printing a price list of several pages in copying ink, the pages to be torn off and signed by a customer asking discounts, the added matter then all being made in copying ink by the company, and a copy taken. By this means an exact record is kept, involving but little labor, and one which cannot fail to be a great convenience in any following business transactions.

Edward Bellamy, the author of "Looking Backward," has just written a fanciful sketch entitled, "With the Eyes Shut," in which he describes an approaching phonographic age. The uses which are found for the phonograph are novel and amusing. Passengers on the railway trains are supplied with phonographic literature so that their eyes are not injured by reading in a jolting coach. The names of the stations are announced by phonograph in clear tones which form a striking contrast to the incomprehensible gibberish of the ordinary brakeman. Mr. Bellamy describes a night's experience in a hotel. He was startled from his dreams by the sound of a voice. He continues: "What had startled me was the voice of a young woman who could not have been standing more than ten feet from my bed. If the tones of his voice were any guide she was not only a young but a very charming one. "My dear sir," she had said, "you may possibly be interested in knowing that it now wants just a quarter of three." His terror vanished when he discovered that the voice issued from a clock which was equipped with a phonographic announcing apparatus.

WIFE MURDER AT TORONTO.

Some time Saturday night Edward Kane, a plasterer, murdered his wife Mary. The two had been drinking together during the day, and both are said to have been drunk in the evening. After committing the crime Kane lay down on a lounge beside the dead body and slept away his debauch, waking up in the morning to find the bruised and bleeding body of his wife. The remainder of the day he spent in drinking about, and mentioned incidentally while drinking that his wife was dead. This set an immediate investigation on foot, and the terrible deed was discovered. Kane mean time had taken the alarm and fled, but was arrested at 10.15 Sunday night. The murder is one rarely equalled in point of atrocity. The body was terribly hacked and beaten, and one terrible wound in the back of the head was inflicted, evidently by a flatiron, which lay near. The house in which the murder was committed is situated at the western corner of Stanley Park and Defoe streets and forms one of the two rough cast cottages, standing together at that point.

The corner's jury in the case of the Kane tragedy brought in a verdict Monday evening that Mary Kane was slain feloniously and with malice aforethought by Thos. Kane. The jurymen were shut up for only a few minutes, as the evidence pointed strongly to the prisoner, and there was no one nor any circumstance that directed the commission of the horrible deed from the drink-crazed husband.

THE ALTON DISASTER

Mrs. Harris' Body Found.

An Inquest Held—The Relief Committee Resigns—Contributions coming in very Slowly—Action against the Township for Damages of Building Commenced.

Although last week's Sun contained a full report of the Alton catastrophe up to the hour of going to press, a great many incidents occurred after the paper was issued.

At about two o'clock Thursday afternoon, the number of searchers discovered the body of Mrs. Harris, one of the two victims of the flood, under a huge pile of debris, a short distance below the G. P. R. bridge and nearly half a mile from where she formerly lived. The body was considerably bruised. Not a stich of clothing was found on the remains, save a nightcap and a belt around the waist. Safely tied up in the belt was the sum of $12. The funeral of Mr. and Mrs. Harris, the two victims of the flood, took place on Friday, and was attended by tremendous concourse of Caledon's citizens. They were laid side by side in the Alton cemetery.

Corner McFadden, of Caledon, held an inquest, and the jury brought in this verdict:

We find that on the night of the 13th of November one of the centre posts in the waste weir of McClintlands dam gave way, resulting in the destruction of three dams, causing a flood, whereby John Harris and his wife, Ellen Harris, came to their death by drowning, and that we recommend that an inspector be appointed by the proper authorities, so as to guard against loss of life and destruction of property in the future.

On Monday the township board of health met, and Dr. Algie, the health inspector, reported in favor of cleaning out the ponds. He said it was well winter was coming on instead of summer, as the several ponds contain from four to five feet of mud, which would spread malaria fever and other diseases. The report was adopted and notices were posted on informing the different persons to have their property cleaned by the 1st of December.

A public meeting was held in the evening, when the members of the Relief committee tendered their resignations, which were accepted. They explained that donations were coming in very slowly owing to the fact that legal proceedings have been taken against the township by some of the losers by the deluge.

Messrs. Ward, Algie, Dick, Meek and McKinnon have laborers at work on their buildings and re-roofing their dams. The work is being pushed forward as rapidly as possible, and the hum of machinery will soon be heard again.

The village was thronged with people on Sunday, who came from the surrounding country to see the Canadian Johnstown.

THEY FOUND THE "BOODLE."

Andrew Drumm, the Kansas City boodler, is on the penitent bench. He has made a full confession of his misdeeds, and Saturday morning he told a detective that a large portion of the boodle he had taken from his uncle was hidden in the woods near Newmarket, a town about 30 miles north of Toronto, and between there and Bracebridge, where, it will be remembered Drumm was married. Andy offered to conduct detectives to the spot where the money was hidden. Two detectives were detailed to accompany him. They left Toronto Saturday by the afternoon train. They searched the woods for several hours in vain, but at last Drumm lighted on the treasure. It was in two tin cans, the lids of which had been securely soldered down, and consisted of about $31,500 in gold, into which medium Drumm had converted the money he had stolen before stowing it away. He carried the two cans about with his baggage for some time, ready to conceal them when any alarm was given, and eventually decided to hide them in the woods, at the place named. On the way back Drumm told the police he had hidden yet more money in a field up in North Toronto, and late Saturday night the police drove up there with Drumm for a guide, and after digging around in the dark for some time he came across another tin box, which subsequently proved to contain $3,570. The amount of money stolen was $38,000. The robbed uncle is jubilant over the recovery of the money, and offered to go bail for Andy, and the police magistrate consented. Andy thereupon was liberated on bail.

TRAIN WRECKED ON THE M. C. R.

St. Thomas, Ont., Nov. 18.—An east bound freight train on the M. C. R., was switched off at Stevensonville, yesterday, owing to a switch having been designedly misplaced by unknown scoundrels. The train was running thirty miles an hour. The engine was turned upside down burying Engineer Reardon, his fireman and Brakeman Murray in the wreck. They managed to crawl out of the small hole in the cab. Reardon was badly cut on the head, and Murray was internally injured and may die. Of the seventy three cars composing the train, forty-seven were wrecked, and live stock, flour, glue, etc., piled heavenward. Over 100 head of sheep were killed and the track so badly torn up that it required nine hours to clear the wreck.

A reward of $500 will be offered for the discovery of the train wreckers. The switch was so arranged that it was foul of both the main line and siding.

MYSTERIOUS AFFAIR.

Prescott, Nov. 20.—The dead bodies of Mr. and Mrs. Fred Brunning were found last night side by side in the house they occupied here. The bodies were found alongside their bed. The woman bears marks of violence about the head, but Brunning has none whatever. It is supposed that Brunning disposed of his wife and then committed suicide. They were about 40 years of age and of dissipated habits. Fortunately they leave no children. Brunning was a mason. An inquest is now being held. Great excitement exists here.

A large number of the animals of Harry Piper's "Zoo" have been brought to Guelph for the winter. They will be quartered on the Saddlands farm, now owned by Mr. West, of Toronto. The animals are under the charge of Mr. McMaster, and if arrangements can be made they will be exibited in the city every Saturday.

Mr. Robt. Irvine offers $40 to any person who will give information that will lead to the conviction of any party or parties caught cutting or removing timber from his farm in East Luther.

Owing to several different entertainments in town on Tuesday evening, the attendance at the Church of England Temperance Society's meeting was unusually small. However, the programme was very instructive and was well received by the audience.

Lost.—On Broadway, Saturday evening, small gold cross. The finder will be rewarded by leaving at this office.

Jubilee Services.—On Sunday morning service will be held in St. Mark's church, in commemoration of the Jubilee of the Diocese of Toronto. All the churches of this diocese are commemorating the Jubilee this week.

Collision at Proton.—Yesterday morning two large freight trains collided at Proton station. About twenty cars are a total wreck, and the two locomotives are lying upside down in the ditch. Strange to say, no lives were lost, but the train hands had a narrow escape.

Another Link of the Law.—Mr. W. J. L. McKay, barrister, etc., has hung out his shingle in town. Mr. McKay is a son of the late Rev. W. E. McKay and a native of this place. He is well-known around here, and will no doubt, be favored with a large practice.

Two Successful "At Homes."—The Ladies Aid Society of the Methodist church gave two very successful "At homes" in the school-room of the church, First avenue, on Tuesday and Wednesday evenings. Both entertainments were attended by a large audience, and the ladies who superintended the affair were congratulated by well pleased people.

Mission at the Herald Angel.—A mission will open in the Herald Angel church, lot 11, Centre road, Mono, on Nov. 28 and continue until Dec. 8. Rev. C. H. Shortt, of Woodbridge, will conduct the services. Services every day at 9:30 A. M. and 4:30, 7:00, 8:00 P. M. We earnestly hope each service will be well attended, and encourage the good work.

Dufferin Farmers' Institute.—A well attended meeting of the Dufferin Farmers' Institute was held at Camilla on Saturday last. Not much business was transacted, however, owing to the lateness of the hour at which the members arrived. The annual meeting of the association will take place in the town hall, Laurel, on Saturday, Nov. 30th. A large attendance is earnestly requested.

Died in Simcoe.—Mrs. A. W. Bartram (nee Miss G. C. Boxall) died at her residence, Simcoe, on Friday last. Rev. Mr. Gimley of that place preached the funeral sermon. He said he had known the deceased ever since she was a child, and, about a year ago, he was hurried home from Montreal to marry her and Mr. Bartram one. Mrs. Bartram is a sister of Mrs J. H. Hughey of this town.

Brown and Sandborne.—A large crowd of Adventists came to town on Sabbath and pitched their tents. Elder Brown, the famous lecturer, is in the city, and Mr. Sandborne was secured to the back up by Chief Shields and Photographer Parkin. McTaggart in the "bastile" once night, and came before P. M. Pattullo on Friday morning. The magistrate imposed a fine of $5.

A Solid Fact.—People would leave no stone unturned but would contribute an obolus for the establishment of a local paper if there were none in this part of the county; yet, strange to say, there are large numbers who can well afford to take a local newspaper who thoughtlessly do not do so. Doing so longer but take The Sun. T'will pay you well, remember; you can have it for an even dollar from now until January 1891. Ask your neighbors to subscribe. Show them this paper.

Hector vs. Bailey.—This was one of the cases which should have come up at the Dufferin fall assizes, but it was taken to Toronto. Thomas Emery, of Orangeville, bought the stock of Skelton & Co., of Shelburne, and re-sold it to Judge, Chapman & Co. Emery did not pay Skelton for the stock, and the latter was compelled to assign. Hector, the assignee, brought action to recover $4 570.97. Justice Falconbridge decided in favor of the plaintiff on Saturday.

The Amaranth Mammoth.—The remains of the preAdamite monster, recently unearthed on Mr. W. B. Jelly's farm in Amaranth, were on exhibition in The Sun building for three days last week. On Thursday about six hundred people viewed the bones, and all admitted that the exhibition was the greatest thing they had ever seen. The gigantic horn, the immense tooth, and the large ribs were the attraction. Mr. John Jelly, the popular manager of the exhibition, conducted the show in a very becoming manner. The excavators are still at work, and other discoveries are anxiously waited for.

Young People's Association.—A meeting of the Young People's Association of the Methodist church will be held in the basement of the church to-morrow (Friday) evening. The following programme will be rendered: Opening chorus, Glee club; reading, Miss Sibley; duett, Misses Harrison and Ritchie; selections from paper, editors; debate, resolved "That woman's mind has had more influence on humanity than man's," affirmative, Messrs. Corkill and Kennedy, negative, Messrs. Hoffman and Felstead; chorus, glee club; recitation, Mr. Coleman; solo, Miss Clark; selections from paper, Editors; organ duett, Messrs. Brown and Shaver; chorus, glee club.

The Alleged Whitecaps.—Four young men, whose names are withheld on account of their respectable parents, were summoned to appear at the police court on Monday afternoon. The four young men were charged with assaulting W. C. Adair, a photographer employed by Mr. W. Still. In our last issue we referred to the assault. When our reporter reached the court house, he was directed to the grandjury's room, where he found the three first named young men, Magistrates Pattullo and McKinnon, Lawyers Walsh (for prosecution) and Myers (for defendants) and several interested spectators. J. J. Hubbard, it is said, worked up the case for the prosecution. Reeve Foster was the only person sworn, but his evidence was unimportant. The case was adjourned until Saturday, when it is expected the plaintiff will be well enough to appear.

HE ELOPED WITH A CHOIR SINGER.

The Buffalo Sunday Times says that Mrs. Carter of Peterboro, Ont., is consulting a Buffalo lawyer about securing a divorce from her husband, Thomas Carter, whom she alleges is living in Buffalo with Annie Graham, a Petsboro seamstress, who sang in the choir there of which Carter was organist. About six months ago Carter left Petebero for Toronto with the avowed intention of securing talent for a concert. He took his little girl with him and neither has since returned. Miss Graham disappeared about the same time and in the same sudden manner. A short while since Mrs. Carter traced the pair to Buffalo and tried to get her child back, but without success, and the matter still remains in that shape, Mrs. Carter having returned home again. Carter is about 32 years of age and was organist of St. Andrew's church, Peterdoro'. At one time he lived in Toronto and held the post of organist of the Church of the Redeemer.

A Business-like Offer.

For many years the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy have offered, in good faith, $500 reward for a case of Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure. The remedy is sold by druggists at only 50 cents. This wonderful remedy has fairly attained a world-wide reputation. If you have dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and purtid; if the eyes are weak, watery and inflamed; if there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice being changed and has a nasal twang; the breath offensive; smell and taste impaired; sensation of dissiness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility, you are suffering from nasal catarrh. The more complicated your disease, the greater the number and adversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive dangerous, or less understood, or more understood, or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians.

quaking widow! for this interview not only confirmed me in my belief that something dark and unknown connected the life of this household with that which had suddenly gone out in the vat at the old mill, but deepened rather than effaced the fatal charm which, contrary to every instinct of my nature, held me in a bondage that more than all things else must make an investigation into this mystery a danger and a pain from which any woman might well recoil, even though she bore in her heart memories of a past like mine.

Poetry.

AMONG THE FLOWERS.

Once, in the Morning Glory,
I had an odd conceit;
Sweet William was a bridegroom,
The bride of Marguerite.

And Violet was the bridesmaid,
She combed the Maiden's Hair
With a dainty bit of Cockscomb,
Found in the garden fair.

The priest, good Johnny Jump-up,
A fitting Monk's Hood wore,
And said the rite in silence,
As ne'er was said before.

"Now, may you live for ever,"
The guests united said;
Fair Lily, tall and stately,
Just bowed her queenly head.

But Rose went up with blushes,
And kissed winsome bride;
Here, too, was Bachelor Button,
With Daisy by his side.

When Blue-bell rang for breakfast,
They went in two by two;
How Bouncing Betty hurried,
She has so much to do.

They ate the Butter-and-the Eggs,
The Honeysuckles to,
And then, from Golden Buttercups,
They sipped the morning dew.

They fanned with Princes' Feathers,
And all were gay I ween;
"No room is here for Bleeding Hearts,"
Quoth Lady-in-the-green.

And some wore Lady Slippers,
And danced to music fine,
Of Lily-bells a-swinging
All in the glad sunshine.

So, from the Morning Glory
Till Four O'clock they stayed;
Dear flowers of the upland,
Sweet blossoms o' the glade.

A BACHELOR'S SECRET.

I keep one precious bit of gold,
Safe hidden like a miser;
And yet if found by robber bold,
He'd never steal my wealth untold.
And none would be the wiser.

Why do I hoard this bit of gold,
Ne'er giving it or lending?
My friend, the story's trite and old;
I loved—but words were weak and cold
Let's hasten to the ending.

The bit I keep no one could miss
From all her wealth, her glory
Of golden hair—gold, and like this,
This curl I took, and left a kiss—
And now you know the story.

"Why prize it so?" I think maybe
Half-way in scorn you queried.
Ah, friend, a miser lovingly
Saves out one bit of gold—ah, me!
When all the rest is buried.

One bit he saves to touch and see.
As I this little token,
Sweetheart, 'tis all I have of thee—
This and a life long memory
Of love that ne'er was spoken.

Through weary years my bit of gold
I've hoarded like a miser;
Friend, when my heart grows tired and cold,
This curl lies in my dying hold,
And none would be the wiser.

ST. HOSPITAL REMEDIES ST.
WILL GIVE YOU
HEALTH!
A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. Three other large hospitals [illegible] with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards attending upon the Professors of these charges. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the hospitals are also centres of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the remedies, and although it would add from $100 to $1000 to make the acquaintance of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the common patent medicines that flood the market and absolutely claim to cure every ill from a simple headache. The most eminent physicians of Germany prescribe these formulas in their own practice, and yet sell them at a mere nominal price. The specific for CATARRH cures that and nothing else; so with the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLES; RHEUMATISM is cured by No. 4, while diseases of DIGESTION, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their own cure. To these is a [illegible] specific for FEVER and AGUE, one for FEMALE WEAKNESS—a GENERAL TONIC and BLOOD-MAKER that makes bl[illegible] and NERVE FORCE AND FULNESS, and an incomparable remedy for NERVOUS DEBILITY.

DR. 1—CURES CATARRH, HAY FEVER, HEAD COLD. GENERAL DEFENCE—The only medicine ever compounding from scientific sources now before the public. This is not a snuff or ointment—both are discarded as injurious. $1.00.

NO. 2—COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION—An incomparable remedy; does not merely stop a cough, but eradicates the disease and strengthens the lungs and soothing irritated tissues. $1.00.

NO. 3—RHEUMATISM AND GOUT—A distinguished and well-known specialist in this disease in Paris, who treats sufferers gratis, built his reputation on this remedy. $1.00.

NO. 4—LIVER AND KIDNEYS, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, CONSTIPATION and BRIGHT'S DISEASE—A favorite kidney-fold for the quack who has taken more strychnine than disease, a remedy questioned in high places. $1.00.

NO. 5—FEVER AND AGUE; DUMB AGUE, MALARIA, NEURALGIA—You know what gross damage this does the system; it is treated to death it, for a time. Use a remedy that eradicates it. $1.

NO. 6—FEMALE WEAKNESS, IRREGULARITIES, WHITES—Many women are broken down because they neglect these diseases until chronic, and control. Also No. 2 and regain health and strength. $1.00.

NO. 7—HEALTH, FORM AND FULNESS depend on good blood and lots of it. If pale, if blood is poor, if anæmic, use this perfect tonic. $1.00.

NO. 8—NERVOUS DEBILITY, LOSS OF POWER—A young convalescent public will hail a genuine remedy for an unfortunate condition. Such is guaranteed, when one trial will prove. Beware of impudent quacks who charge high prices for cheap and worthless drugs and pills, the properties of which they steal from the medical profession, and, and who expose you by selling your confidential letters to strangers in the same nefarious business. Use No. 2 and this specific. $1.00.

THE GALE SULKY HARROW M'F'G. COMPANY,

OF WINDSOR, ONTARIO,

Have a company of men and eight waggons now working in this vicinity. They are making Orangeville headquarters, and the Farmers of this vicinity should see their machine work before purchasing anything in that line, as all who have used the GALE pronounce it a grand success. Their manner of doing business is such that it meets all the requirements of the times. They take their machine on a man's farm, show him how it does its work, and allow him to judge for himself.

We respectfully call your attention to a few of the many testimonials received from our patrons:

Euphrasia, June 22, 1889.

Gale Sulky Harrow Co.

Gentlemen,—This is to certify that I bought one of your combined Harrows and Seeders and have used it to sow 15 acres of oats and barley, which is now up and looking first class. It looks much better than grain sown along side of it, with a drill I think it is the proper way to sow grain to get the best results.

Yours truly,
DANIEL BATH.

Gale Sulky Harrow Mfg. Co.
Windsor, Ont.

Dear Sirs,—I bought one of your Sulky Harrows and Seeders and have used it to sow 25 acres of oats and 5 acres of peas that is now up and looking fine. I never saw grain sown better or more evenly, and after testing your machine in the different kinds of work I must say that I consider it the most general purpose machine ever introduced in this neighborhood; I also think it the cheapest machine in the market and would not take $100 for mine if I could not get another like it. Yours truly,

FREDRICK EAGLES,
Markdale, Ont.

Gale Harrow Manufacturing Co.,
Windsor, Ont.

Gentlemen,—I bought one of your Sulky Harrows and Seeders and have used it to prepare and sow nineteen acres of grain that is now up and looking first class. I never saw grain more evenly sown, and am well pleased with the Gale in every respect. I used the cultivator to prepare five acres of very rough sod ground where the cradle knolls were thick and it did the work to perfection.

Yours respectfully,
R. W. BLAKELY,
Markdale, Ont

Erin, Ont., Aug. 1889.

Gale Sulky Harrow Co.,
Windsor, Ont.

Sirs,—This is to certify that I bought one of your combined Harrows and Cultivators about twelve months ago and have worked it on all kinds of ground, some of it so sody that I could not work my broadcast seeder, but the Gale made a first class job. I am well pleased with it in every respect. Yours.

GEORGE B. HURD.

Gale Harrow Mfg Co.,
Windsor, Ont.

Dear Sirs,—I have bought one of your combined Harrows and Seeders, I have used it only on spring plowed sod, as yet it gives me entire satisfaction and think it far ahead of anything I have saw yet for sod as, with your adjustable frame there is no possibility of clogging or turning back sods and still it cuts so to make a first class seed bed.

Yours truly,
A. E. WELLER,
Duncan P. O.

Markdale, Ont., June 27, 1889.

Gale Sulky Harrow Co., Windsor, Ont.

Gentlemen,—I bought one of your Sulky Harrows and Seeders on May the 8th, and have used it to sow 20 acres of grain, (15 of oats and 5 of peas) that is now up, and I can say that I never saw grain more evenly sown. I also sowed my grass seed at the same time and consider your Grass Seeder perfection. I used the cultivator on my potato ground where the thistles were very thick and it did a first class job. I think you have the best general purpose machine ever introduced in this section.

Yours respectfully,
PATRICK BUTLER.

Dear Sir,—I have pleasure in certifying that we purchased a Gale Harrow and Seeder for use on this farm, have tried it thoroughly in various soils and conditions and are well satisfied with the work it does. Respectfully,

JAMES MILLS, Pres Ont. Ag. College

Caledon, Aug. 22, 1889.

The Gale Sulky Harrow Co.

Sirs,—This is to certify that I purchased one of your Harrows and Seeders last year and have used it to cultivate and sow sixty acres of crop, and am well pleased with the way it did the work.

WM. T. DAVIDSON, Alton P. O.

Artemesia, May 13th, 1889.

To the Gale Sulky Harrow Co.

Dear Sirs,—I purchased one of your Sulky Harrows and Seeders after testing it thoroughly. Althe I had a drill that cost me $85 and a set of Spring Tooth Harrows that cost me $20, I consider the Gale the best machine in the market, and have no hesitation in recommending it to my farmer friends. Your, &c.

ROBERT OLIVER.

Grand Valley, Ont., Aug 23, 1889.

Gale Sulky Harrow Mfg Co.,
Windsor, Ont.

Dear Sirs,—I bought one of your Sulky Harrows and Seeders over one year ago. I used it last spring to cultivate 40 acres of fall plowing and think it is far superior to a gang plow. I also used it on sod and consider it the best sod harrow I ever saw. I have used your seeder to sow 40 acres of grain—peas, oats, barley and wheat—and I never saw grain better or more evenly sowed and can recommend it as the best seed sower in the market. I have used a drill for some years, but consider the Gale the best general purpose machine ever introduced in this neighborhood; and in fact it does all your agent claimed for it, and I would not be without one for any reasonable price.

Yours truly, DAVID WOODS

IF WE KNEW.

If we knew when walking thoughtless
In the noisy crowded way,
That some pearl of wonderous whiteness
Close beside our pathway lay,
We could pause where now we hasten,
We would often look around,
Lest our careless feet should trample
Some rare jewel to the ground.

If we knew what forms were fainting
For the shade that we should fling;
If we knew what lips are parching
For the water we could bring,
We would haste with eager footsteps,
We would work with willing hands,
Bearing cups of cooling water,
Planting rows of shading palms.

If we knew, when friends around us
Closely press to my good-by,
Which among the lips that kissed us
First would 'neath the daisies lie,
We would clasp our arms around them,
Looking on them through our tears;
Tender words of love eternal
We would whisper in their ears.

If we knew what lives are darkened
By some thoughtless word of ours,
Which had never lain among them
Like the frost among the flowers;
Oh, with what sincere repenting,
With what anguish of regret,
While our eyes were overflowing,
We would cry, "Forgive! forget!"

If we knew! Alas! and do we Ever care and seek to know
Whether bitter herbs or roses
In our neighbor's garden grow?
God forgive us! lest hereafter
Our hearts break to hear him say:
"Careless child, I never knew you,
From my presence flee away."

The Story Teller.

THE MILL MYSTERY.

CHAPTER VI.

My mind she has mated, and amazed my sight
I think but dare not speak.
—MACBETH.

THAT day was a marked one in my life. It was not only the longest I have ever known, but it was by far the dreariest, and, if I may use the word in this connection, the most unearthly. Indeed I cannot think of it to this day without a shudder; its effect being much the same upon my memory as that of a vigil in some underground tomb, where each moment was emphasized with horror lest the dead lying before me might stir beneath their cerements and wake. The confinual presence of one or both of the brothers at my side did not tend to alleviate the dread which the silence, the constant suspense, the cold gloom of the ever dimly-lighted chamber were calculated to arouse; for the atmosphere of unreality and gloom was upon them too, and, saving the quick, short sigh that escaped from their lips now and then neither of them spoke nor relaxed for an istant from that strain of painful attention which had for its focus their mother's stony face. Mrs. Harrington, who, in her youthful freshness and dimpled beauty, might have relieved the universal sombreness of the scene, was not in the room all day; but whether this was on account of her inability to confront sickness and trouble, or whether it was the result of the wishes of her bothers, I have never been able to decide: probably the latter, for, though she was a woman of a frivolous mind, she had a due sense of the proprieties, and was never known to violate them except under the stress of another will more powerful than her own.

At last, as the day waned, and what light there was gradually vanished from the shadowy chamber, Guy made a movement of discouragement, and, rising from his place, approached his brother, dropped a word in his ear, and quietly left the room. The relief I felt was instantaneous. It was like having one coil of an oppressive nightmare released from my breast. Dwight, on the contrary, who had sat like a statue ever since the room began to darken, showed no evidence of being influenced by this change, and, convinced that any movement towards a more cheerful order of things must come from me, I rose, and, without consulting his wishes, dropped the curtains and lighted the lamp. The instant I had done so I saw why he was so silent and immovable. Overcome by fatigue, and possibly by a long strain of suppressed emotion, he had fallen asleep, and ignorant of the fact that Guy had left the room, slumbered as peacefully as if no break had occurred in the mysterious watch they had hitherto so uninterruptedly maintained over their mother and me.

The peacefulness of his sleeping face made a deep impression upon me. Though I knew that with his waking the old look would come back, it was an indescribable pleasure to me to see him, if but for an instant, free from that shadowy something which dropped a veil of mistrust between us. It seemed to show me that evil was not innate in this man, and explained, if it did not justify, the weakness which had made me more lenient to what was doubtful in his appearance and character than I had been to that of his equally courteous but less attractive brother.

The glances I allowed myself to cast in his direction were fleeting enough, however. Even if womanly delicacy had not forbidden me to look too often and too long that way, the sense of the unfair advantage I was possibly taking of his weakness made the possibility of encountering his waking eye a matter of apprehension. I knew that honor demanded I should rouse him, that he would not thank me for letting him sleep after his brother had left the room and, yet, whether from too much heart—he was in such sore need of rest—or from too little conscience I was in such sore need of knowledge—I let him slumber on, and never made so much as a move after my first startled discovery of his condition.

And so five minutes, ten minutes, went by, and imperceptibly to myself, the softening influence which his sleeping countenance had exerted upon me deepened and strengthened till I began to ask if I had not given too much scope to my imagination since I had been in this house, and foolishly attributed a meaning to expressions and events that in my calmer moments would show themselves to possess no special significance.

The probability was that I had, and once allowing myself to admit this idea, it is astonishing how rapidly it gained possession of my judgment, altering the whole tenor of my thoughts, and if not exactly transforming the situation into one of cheerfulness and ease, at least robbing it of much of that sepulchral character which had hitherto made it so nearly unbearable to me. The surroundings, too, seemed to partake of the new spirit of life which had seized me. The room looked less shadowy, and lost some of that element of mystery which had made its dimly seen corners the possible abode of supernatural visitants. Even the clock ticked less lugubriously, and that expressionless face on the pillow—

Great God! It is looking at me! With two wide open, stony eyes it is staring into my very soul like a spirit from the tomb, awakening there a horror infinitely deeper than any I had felt before, though I knew it was but the signal of returning life to the sufferer, and that I ought to rouse myself and welcome it with suitable ministrations, instead of sitting there like a statue of fear in the presence of an impending fate. But do what I would, say to myself what I would, I could not stir. A nightmare of terror was upon me, and not till I saw the stony lips move and the face take a look of life in the effort made to speak, did I burst the spell that held me and start to my feet. Even then I dared not turn around nor raise my voice to warn the sleeper behind me that the moment so long waited for had come. A power behind myself seemed to hold me silent, waiting, watching for those words that struggled to life so painfully before me. At last they came, filling the room with echoes hollow as they were awful!

"Dwight! Guy! If you do not want me to haunt you, swear you will never divulge what took place between you and Mr. Barrows at the mill."

"Mother!" rang in horror through the room. And before I could turn my head, Dwight Pollard leaped by me, and hiding the face of the dying woman on his breast, turned on me a gaze that was half wild, half commanding, and said:

"Go for my brother! He is in the north-west room. Tell him our mother raves." Then, as I took a hurried, though by no means steady step toward the door, he added: "I need not ask you to speak to no one else?"

"No," my cold lips essayed to utter, but an unmeaning murmur was all that left them. The reaction from hope and trust to a now really tangible fear had been too sudden and overwhelming.

But by the time I had reached the room to which I had been directed, I had regained in a measure my self control. Guy Pollard at least should not see that I could be affected by anything that could happen in this house. Yet when, in answer to my summons, he joined me in the hall, I found it difficult to preserve the the air of respectful sympathy I had assumed, so searching was his look, and so direct the question with which he met his brother's message.

"My mother raves, you say; will you be kind enough to tell me what her words were?"

"Yes," returned I, scorning to prevaricate in a struggle I at least meant should be an honest one. "She called upon her sons, and said she would haunt them if ever they divulged what took place between them and Mr. Barrows at the mill."

"Ah!" he coldly laughed; "she does indeed rave." And while I admire his self control, I could not prevent myself from experiencing an increased dread of this nature that was so ready for all emergencies and so panoplied against all shock.

I might have felt a more vivid apprehension still, had I know what was passing in his mind as we traversed the hall back to the sick chamber. But the instinct that had warned me of so much, did not warn me of that, and it was with no other feeling than one of surprise that I noted the extreme deference with which he opened his mother's door for me, and waited even in that moment of natural agitation and suspense for me to pass over the threshold before he presumed to enter himself.

Dwight Pollard, however, did not seem to be so blind, for a change passed over his face as he saw us, and he half rose from the crouching position he still held over his mother's form. He subsided back, however, as I drew to one side and let Guy pass unheeded to the bed, and it was in quite a natural tone he bade me sent myself in the alcove towards which he pointed, till his mother's condition required my services.

That there was really nothing to be done for her, I saw myself in the one glimpse I caught of her face as he started up. She was on the verge of death, and her last moments were certainly due to her children. So I passed into the alcove, which was really a small room opening out of the large one, and flinging myself on the lounge I saw there, asked myself whether I ought to shut the door between us, or whether my devotion to Ada's cause bade me listen to whatever came directly in my way to hear? The fact that I was in a measure prisoned there, there being no other outlet to the room than the one by which I had entered, determined me to ignore for once the natural instincts of my ladyhood; and pale and trembling to a degree I would not have wished seen by either of these two mysterious men, I sat in a dream of suspense, hearing and not hearing the low hum of their voices as they reasoned with or consoled the mother, now fast drifting away into an endless night.

Suddenly—shall I ever forget the thrill it gave me;—her voice rose again in those tones whose force and commanding power I have found it impossible to describe.

"The oath! the oath! Dwight, Guy, by my dying head——"

"Yes, mother," I heard one voice interpose; and by the solemn murmur that followed, I gathered that Guy had thought it best to humor her wishes.

The long drawn sigh which issued from her lips testified to the relief he had given her, and the "Now Dwight!" which followed was uttered in tones more gentle and assured.

But to this appeal no solemn murmur ensued, for at that instant a scream arose from the bed, and to the sound of an opening door rang out the words:

"Keep her away! What do you let her come in here for, to confound me and make me curse the day she was born! Away! I say, away."

Horrified, and unable to restrain the impulse that moved me, I sprang to my feet and rushed upon the scene. The picture that met my eyes glares at me now from the black background of the past. On the bed, that roused figure, awful with the whadows of death, raised, in spite of the constraining hands of her two sons, into an attitude expressive of the most intense repulsion, terror, and dread; and at the door, the fainting form of the pretty, dimpled, care shunning daughter, who, struck to the heart by this poisoned dart from the hand that should have been lifted in blessing, stood swaying in dismay, her wide, blue eyes fixed on the terrible face before her, and her hands outstretched and clutching in vague fear after some support that would sustain her, and prevent her falling crushed to the floor.

To bound to her side, and lift her gently out of her mother's sight, was the work of a moment. But in that moment my eyes had time to see such a flash of infinite longing take the place of the fierce passions upon that mother's face, that my heart stood still, and I scarcely knew whether to bear my burden from the room, or to rush with it to that bedside and lay it, in all its childlike beauty on that maddened mother's dying breast. A low, deep groan from the bed decided me. With that look of love on her face, otherwise distorted by every evil passion, Mrs. Pollard had fallen back into the arms of her two sons, and quietly breathed her last.

CHAPTER VII.

ADVANCES.

For they are actions that a man might play;
But I have that within which passeth show.
—HAMLET.

"Miss Sterling?"

I was sitting by the side of Mrs. Harrington in her own room. By a feverish exertion of strength I had borne her thither from her mother's chamber, and was now watching the returning hues of life color her pale cheek. At the sound of my name, uttered behind me, I arose. I had expected a speedy visit from one of the brothers, but I had been in hopes that it would be Dwight, and not Guy, who would make it.

"I must speak to you at once; will you follow me?" asked that gentleman, bowing respectfully as I turned.

I glanced at Mrs. Harrington, but he impatiently shook his head.

"Anice is at the door," he remarked. "She is accustomed to Mrs Harrington and will see that she is properly looked after." And, leading the way, he ushered me out, pausing only to cast one hurried glance back at his sister, as if to assure himself that she was not yet sufficiently recovered to note his action.

In the hall he offered me his arm.

"The gas has not yet been lighted," he explained, "and I wish you to go with me to the parlor."

This sounded formidable, but I did not hesitate. I felt able to confront this man.

"I am at your service," I declared, with a comfortable sensation that my tone conveyed something of the uncompromising spirit I felt.

The room to which he conducted me was on the first floor, and was darkness itself when we entered. It was musty, too, and chill, as with the memory of a past funeral and the premonition of a new one.

Even the light which he soon made did not seem to be at home in the spot, but wavered and flickered with faint escape, as if it longed to efface itself and leave the grand and solitary apartment to its wonted atmosphere of cold reserve. By its feeble flame I noted but two details: one was the portrait of Mrs. Pollard in her youth, and the other was my own reflection in some distant mirror. The first filled me with strange thoughts, the face was so wickedly powerful, if I may so speak; handsome, but with that will beneath its beauty which, allied to selfishness, has produced the Lucretia Borgias and Catharine de Medicis of the world.

The reflection of which I speak, dimly seen as it was, had, on the contrary, a calming effect upon my mind. Weary as I undoubtedly was, and pale it not haggard with the emotions I had experienced, there was something natural and alive in my image that recalled happier scenes to my eyes, and gave me the necessary strength to comfort the possibilities of the present interview.

Mr. Pollard, who in his taciturn gloom seemed like the natural genius of the spot, appeared to be struck by this same sensation also, for his eyes wandered more than once to the mirror, before he summoned up courage, or, perhaps, I should say, before he took the determination to look me in the face and open the conversation. When he did, it was curious to note the strife of expression between his eye and lip: the one hard, cold, and unyielding; the other depreciating in its half-smile and falsely gentle, as if the mind that controlled it was even then divided between its wish to subdue and the necessity it felt to win.

"Miss Sterling," so he began, "it would be only folly for me to speak as if nothing had occurred but an ordinary and natural death. It would be doing your good sense and womanly judgement but little honor, and putting myself, or rather ourselves—for we children are but one in this matter—in a position which would make any after-explanations exceedingly difficult. For explanations can be given, and in a word, for what has doubtless struck you as strange and terrible in my mother's last hours,—explanations which I am sure you will be glad to accept, as it is not natural for one so blooming in her womanliness to wish to hamper her youth with dark thoughts, or to nurse suspicions contrary to her own candid and noble nature."

He paused, but meeting with no response beyond a rather cool bow, the strife between his eye and lip became more marked. He went on, however, perfectly satisfied, his voice retaining its confident tone, whatever the disturbance communicated to his inward nature.

"The explanation to which I allude is this," said he. "My mother for the past three months has been the victim of many unwholesome delusions. The sickness of my father, which was somewhat prolonged, made great inroads upon her strength; and his death, followed by the necessity of parting with Mrs. Harrington—whom you perhaps know was for family reasons married immediately upon my father's decease,—sowed the seed of a mental weakness which culminated on her deathbed into a positive delirium. She had a notion, and has had it for weeks, unknown to every one but my brother and myself, that Mrs. Harrington had been the occasion of some great misfortune to us; whereas the innocent girl had done nothing but follow out her mother's wishes, both in her marriage and in her settlement in a distant town. But the love my mother had felt for her was always the ruling passion of her life, and when she came to find herself robbed of a presence that was actually necessary to her well being, her mind, by some strange subtlety of disease I do not profess to understand, confounded the source of her grief with its cause, attributing to this well beloved daughter's will the suffering which only sprang out of the circumstances of the case. As to her wild remarks in regard to Mr. Barrows," he added with studied indifference, "and the oath she wished us to take, that was but an outgrath of the shock she had received in hearing of the clergyman's death. For, of course, I need not assure you, Miss Sterling, that for all our readiness to take the oath she demanded, neither my brother nor myself ever were at the mill, or knew any more of the manner or cause of Mr. Barrows' death than you do."

This distinct denial, made in quiet but emphatic tones, caused me to look up at him with what was perhaps something of an expressive glance. For at its utterance the longing cry had risen in my heart, "Oh, that it were Dwight who had said that!" And the relinquishment which it immediately brought of the glad credence which it would have received from me had it only fallen from his lips caused an inward tremble of self consciousness which doubtless communicated itself to my glance. For Guy Pollard, without waiting for any words I might have to say, leaned towards me with a gratified air, and with what I would like to call a smile, exclaimed:

"You have been in the house scarcely twenty-four hours, but I feel as if I could already give you the title of friend. Will you accept it from me, Miss Sterling, and wish it my most cordial appreciation and esteem?"

"Ah, this is more bait!" I thought, and was tempted to indignantly repel the hand he held out; but something restrained me which I am too proud to call fear, and which in reality I do not think was fear, so much as it was wonder and the desire to understand the full motive of a condescension I would not but feel was unprecedented in this arrogant nature. I therefore gave him my hand, but in a steady, mechanical way that I flattered myself committed me to nothing; though the slight but unmistakable pressure he returned seemed to show that he took it for a sign of amity, if not absolute surrender.

"You relieve of a great weight," he acknowledged. "Had you been of a common-place type of woman, you might have made it very uncomfortable for us."

"And what have I said and done," I could not help remarking, though neither so bitterly nor with so much irony as I might have done had that desire of which I have spoken been less keen than it was, "to lead you to think I shall not yet do so?"

"Your glance is your surety," was the response he made. "That and your honest hand, which does not lightly fall in that of a stranger." And with a real smile now, though it was by no means the reassuring and perhaps attractive one he doubtless intended it to be, he fixed me with his subtle glance, in which I began to read a meaning, if not a purpose, that made the blood leap indignantly to my heart, and caused me to feel as if I had somehow stumbled into a snare from which it would take more than ordinary skill and patience to escape.

A look down the shadowy room restored my equanimity, however. It was all so unreal, so ghosty, I could not help acknowledging to myself that I was moving in a dream which exaggerated every impression I received, even that which might be given by the bold gaze of an unscrupulous man. So I determined not to believe in it, or in anything else I could see that night, unless it were in the stern soul of the woman who had just died; a qualification which my mind could not help making to itself as my eyes fell again upon her portrait, with its cruel, unrelenting expression.

"You do not feel at home?" exclaimed Guy, interpreting according to his needs my silence and the looks I had thrown about me. "I do not wonder," he [illegible] "Dreariness like this has little to do with youth and beauty. But I hope"—here he took a step nearer, while that meaning look—oh, my God! was I deceiving myself!—deepened in his eyes—"I hope the day will come when you will see the sunshine stream through the gloom of these dim recesses, and in the new cheer infused into the life of this old mansion forget the scenes of horror that encompassed the beginning of our friendship." And with a bow that seemed to intimate that necessity, and not his wishes, forced him to terminate this interview, he was stepping back when the door opened quickly behind him and the face of Dwight Pollard showed itself on the threshold.

The look he cast at his brother and me caused a fresh tumult to take place in my breast. Was it displeasure he showed? I was pleased to think so. I could not be sure of his feeling, however for almost on the instant his brow cleared, and advancing with an excuse for his interruption, he spoke a few low words to Guy. The latter gravely bowed, and with just a slight glance in my direction, immediately left the room. I was once more alone with Dwight Pollard.

He seemed to feel the situation as much as I did, for it was several moments before he spoke, and when he did, his voice had a subdued tremble in it which I had noticed before.

"Miss Sterling," he remarked, "my brother has been talking to you, trying, I presume, to explain to you the distressing scene to which you have just been witness."

I bowed, for I seemed to have no words to say, though he evidently longed to hear me speak,

"My brother is not always considerate in his manner of address," he went on, after a moments intent scrutiny of my face. "I hope he has not made you feel other than satisfied of our good-will towards you?"

"No," I faintly smiled, wishing I knew what feeling prompted this subtle attempt to learn the nature of the interview which had just passed. "Mr. Guy Pollard has never been anything but polite to me."

He looked at me again as if he would read my very soul, but I gave him no help to its understanding, and he presently dropped his eyes.

"Did he tell you," he at last resumed with some effort, "that it is our wish for you to remain in this house till our mother is buried?"

"No," I returned "he said nothing about it."

"But you will do so?" he queried, in that rich and deep tone which thrilled so dangerously to my heart.

"I—I must have time to think," I faltered, taken by surprise, and not seeing my way as clearly as I could wish. "It is my desire to attend the funeral

THE NEW CABINET MINISTER

(From Yesterday's Empire.)

AT a meeting of the Dominion Cabinet yesterday it was decided to present the name of Mr. Charles C. Colby, M. P. for Stanstead, to his Excellency the Governor General for the portfolio of President of the Privy Council. The nomination of Mr. Colby to a position in the Cabinet will, we are sure, be received with general approbation. He is known to be a man of exceptional ability, an eloquent speaker, a skilled debater and a parliamentarian of long experience. Mr. Colby has represented the county of Stanstead in the Dominion Parliament continuously since Confederation, and possesses not only the confidence of his own political party, but the respect and good-will of those who differ from him politically. In 1887 he was chosen for the important post of Deputy Speaker of the House of Commons, his selection being unanimously concurred in, and his discharge of the duties of that office has met with universal commendation. His appointment will be recognised as an additional strength to an already strong and able Ministry, and will, it may confidently be expected, justify the foresight and wisdom exercised by Sir John MacDonald in the choice of his colleagues. It is announced, also, that the veteran Premier will continue to hold the portfolio of Minister of Railways and Canals, the duties of which he has been fulfilling for some time.

A STUPID STORY.

(Montreal Gazette.)

The Toronto Mail has faith enough in the gullibility of its readers to publish the following yarn:—

"Intelligent observers in Quebec say that a surprise is in store for the country—that before the end of another year Mr. Mercier will be Sir John Macdonald's right hand man in that province vice Sir Hector, who is to be deposed. Mr. Mercier wants money, the province being overwhelmed with debt, and cannot hope to obtain 'better terms,' while he remains hostile to the Old Man. The Old Man in turn, wants Quebec support, especially in view of the upheaval in Ontario, and Mr. Mercier is just the man to secure it for him provided an amicable understanding can be reached. This story is believed by many Nationalists and Conservatives, and we give it for what it is worth. Sir John has made just as queer alliances in the course of his life, and Mr. Mercier is not very strait laced. He would probably sacrifice Mr. Laurier and the Dominion Liberals without a qualm for 'better terms,' to the extent of ten millions."

It is needless to say that no intelligent observer in Quebec has ever circulated the above story. An intelligent man would at once laugh it to rest, and the obvious purpose of its publication in the Mail is simply to detach support from Sir John in Ontario, in accordance with the policy the Mail has consistently pursued for three years past. Mr. Mercier no doubt wants better terms from the Dominion, and has not hesitated to say so, declaring in his recent speech at the National club that the provincial subsidy ought to be increased. Neither Sir John Macdonald nor Mr. Mercier, nor any other public men, we are persuaded, can bring about this policy. The Interprovincial conference agreed to make a demand upon the Ottawa Government for more money, and for a season the Liberal leaders in all the provinces were in accord in pressing for a larger share of the Federal revenues, but since the settlement of the Jesuits' Estates question Mr. Mowat has withdrawn from the compact, and whatever chance of success it may once have had is at an end. If the people of Canada are wisely guided they will press not for an increase of provincial subsidies, but for further application of the plan of taking money out of one pocket to put it in the other, but for the abolition of the system altogether.

THE TRADE MARKS ACT.

Important to Export Merchants.

The Minister of Customs at Ottawa has received a communication from the High Commissioner's office, which is of such paramount importance to Canadian merchants engaged in the export trade that they would do well to make a careful note of it. It appears that in August last Mr. Lud Wurzburg, of Halifax, shipped to Antwerp, via London, a consignment of canned lobsters, destined for Belgian and German markets. At the request of the parties purchasing the goods, presumably relatives of the Canadian shipper, the tins were labelled "Wurzburg et cie, Hamburg," giving the impression that they had been put up in Hamburg. This is not an unusual proceeding on the part of business men. A merchant who has also the reputation of being a manufacturer of the goods in which he deals often has to go to another individual to obtain his goods and to keep up appearances has them branded and placed in the market in his own name. In Mr. Wurzburg's case this procedure ran full tilt against the Imperial Merchandise Marks act of 1887, one of the sections of which expressly provides that the statement of the country of production must be placed on all labels of goods imported into England. The consignment of lobsters on arrival at London instead of being entered at customs as in transit were entered for home consumption, and this led to their examination and subsequent seizure by the London customs authorities for a contravention of the clause of the Merchandise Marks act referred to, which renders goods liable to confiscation. The Imperial act applies equally to goods of foreign production imported into Great Britain, and in this case the word "foreign" is held to apply to every country outside of the British Isles, whether such goods are imported for home use or are "in transit" to another country. Had the lobsters been entered as "in transport" they might have escaped seizure, but even then the law would have been contravened. Sir Charles Tupper's timely intervention, and Mr. Wurzburg's proof that no fraud was intended, secured the release of the goods after considerable delay, but none the less the incident is one which should serve as a warning to other Canadian exporters that Canadian products must bear the name of the manufacturer or producer and that alone. It should also have its effects upon United States lobster canners, who operate in Prince Edward Island, and who persistently label P. E. I. lobsters as Boston products, thereby depriving Canada of the credit to which she is justly entitled of producing the finest canned lobsters of any country.

HARVEY'S DEATH WATCH.

GUELPH, Nov. 26.—This morning, shortly after receiving the message from the Government that the sentence of the court would have to be carried into effect, the sheriff made the official announcement to the prisoner. He made no reply, nor did he evince any sign of emotion or seem in the least degree moved by the intelligence thus conveyed to him. Shortly afterwards he asked to have a telegram sent from him to his son, informing him of the decision of the Government. His request was granted and the message sent.

A MAN OF IRON WILL AND NERVE.

Jailer Mercer said that during all the time Harvey has been in the jail here he never gave the least indication that he was not in full possession of his senses. He wrote letters about twice a week to his son and received answers thereto. The penmanship, even after the knowledge of his approaching end, was in his usual style and free from any evidence of nervousness. "He is a man of iron will and nerve," said Mr. Mercer. "He is, however, very irritable, and on one occasion gave vent to his irritable temper over a trifling circumstance, for which he subsequently apologized to me. He was, by the jail surgeon's orders, allowed any kind of diet that he might choose to order. He was not at all fastidious as to the quality of his food, but usually preferred that of farinaceous kind. He never partook of meat, butter or eggs."

THE SHERIFF AT WORK.

The sheriff has commenced preparations for the execution, which will take place at about ten o'clock on Friday morning, in the jail yard. The instrument of death was received by the sheriff this morning. It consists of a rope and pulley with a heavy weight attached to one end. The old system of dropping the victim through a trapdoor is abolished. This contrivance will jerk him into the air, making the rebound downwards instead of upwards, thus ensuring a more speedy and effective dislocation of the neck.

THE DEATH WATCH.

The most rigid surveillance is kept up night and day over the prisoner. His very act is closely watched by the guards set over him. His demeanor has not changed in any respect since being informed that his doom is sealed. Sheriff McKim wears a look of anxiety, occasioned by the melancholy part which his official duty will compel him to perform. The services of a hangman have already been tendered.

ENGAGING A HANGMAN.

Sheriff McKim, visited Toronto yesterday for the purpose of engaging a man to execute Harvey on Friday. He received four applications, one of which was from Macdonald, who hung Neil. The Sheriff, however, did not look with favor on his application, and it is probable that he will give the job to someone else.

We hope this expensive experiment will teach the boys a lesson not soon to be forgotten.

SHE CHOSE ANOTHER.—Some Orangeville girls are very eccentric. On Monday one of them, who was engaged to be married to a young man of the town, left her home with the intention of going to sew at a neighbor's. But nothing was heard of her until Tuesday, when her parents received a letter informing them that she had gone to Toronto and had been married to a young man well known here, and formerly a resident of Caledon. ## SUICIDE AT CATARACT!

Mrs. Wales Terminates Herself in a Barrel of Water on Thursday.

A sensational crime occurred at Cataract on Thursday afternoon last. The community was shocked by the announcement that Mrs. Charles Wales had ended her existence by drowning herself in a barrel of water.

For some time past it was noticed that the woman acted very strangely. On Thursday afternoon Mrs. Wales asked her daughter Mary to go into the parlor and play a tune on the organ. The daughter complied with the request, and in a short time returned to the kitchen, where, to her horror, she found her mother cramped up in a barrel with her head under water. When discovered life was extinct.

The circumstances surrounding the woman's death aroused suspicion, and Dr. McFadden, of Caledon, held a coroner's inquest. Dr. McNaughton, of Erin, made a post mortem examination. The jury brought in a verdict of "Found Drowned."

When the woman was a little girl, she was adopted by Mr. James Harrison, of Orangeville, then of Caledon, and remained with him until she was twenty-two years of age. Then she was married to Mr. Michael Delane, who was killed by a snow plow at Cataract two years ago. A short time ago she married one Charles Wales, who, it is believed, has a wife and family in England. Some suppose this deranged the woman's mind, and drove her to suicide. She made a will a few days before her death.

FIGHTING ON THE MARCH.

STANLEY'S PROGRESS THROUGH THE DARK CONTINENT.

An Important South Westerly Extension of Lake Victoria Nyanza Discovered—It is "Major" Wissmann Now—Died in their Harness.

LONDON, Nov. 25.—The British Consul at Zanzibar telegraphs to the Foreign Office as follows: Stanley arrived at Mpwapwa on the 55th day after his departure from the Victoria Nyanza, and the 188th day after leaving the Albert Nyanza. In addition to the names already telegraphed, Stanley has with him Hoffman, Emin's daughter, and Fathers Greul and Schinz of the Algerine Mission. Stanley left Nyuapwa on Nov. 12th, traveling toward the coast by way of Kombe and Mwomi. Stanley made an unexpected discovery of real value, in finding an extension of the Victoria Nyanza toward the south west. The utmost southerly reach of the extension is south latitude 2, 18. This brings the Victoria Nyanza within 155 miles of Lake Tanganyika. The area of the extension is 26,000 square miles.

According to further advices received by the Foreign Office Stanley has with him 750 persons, of whom 290 are Emin's followers. There are also sixty children in the party. Stanley lost only eighteen men during the march from the Victoria Nyanza. He had four days' fighting near Uisukuma. The expedition is expected to arrive at Bagamoyo in a fortnight.

A CONTINUOUS BATTLE.

ZANZIBAR, Nov. 25.—Mr. Stanley in a letter to the British Consul at Zanzibar gives in addition to the news already cabled the following story:

Every previous expedition has seen the tightening of its labors upon nearing the sea. But the long string of hammock bearers with us now tells a different tale. Till we can place the poor things in our company on shipboard there will be no rest for us. The worst of it is that we have not the privilege of showing you at Zanzibar the full extent of our labors. After carrying some of them a thousand miles and fighting to the right and left of the sick, driving the Warasura from their prey over ranges of mountains with every energy on full strain they slip through our hands and die in their hammocks. One lady 75 years old, mother of Vakiel, died in this manner.

In North Unkuma, south of the Victoria Nyanza, we had a stirring time for four days as anywhere on our route. There was continuous fighting during the greater part of the daylight hours. The foolish natives took an unaccountable prejudice against Emin's people. They insisted that they were cannibals, and had come for no good purpose. Talking was useless, as any attempt to dispove their impression only drove them into a white-hot rage, and in their mad hate in flinging themselves on us they suffered severely.

I am advised that the Semba and Mivene route is the best for securing an abundance of food, and therefore I propose to adopt it. But as regards danger from attacks by natives, one road seems to be as bad as another.

Regarding the Victoria, Nyanza Stanley says it is 1,900 square miles larger than reported by Speke, whose statement regarding the size of the lake was supposed to be an exaggeration. Uriji also, which Speke so lightly sketched, turns out to be a very respectable lake with populated islands.

STANLEY TO WISSMANN.

ZANZIBAR, Nov. 25.—Stanley, writing to Captain Wissmann, from Mywapwa, Nov 11th, says: "I have often wished to see you. Fate has brought us within a few days of each other. I hope that it will still be auspicious and keep you till I have a pleasing opportunity of knowing a colleague who has labored so unostentatiously and well in a similar field under the same royal patronage."

STRANGER THAN FICTION.

The Mysterious Manifestations of Pontiac County Spooks.

OTTAWA, Nov. 25.—After reading of the mysterious manifestations in the house of Geo. Daggs, at Clarendon front, Pontiac County, Mr. Woodcock, R.C.A., of Brockville, who has devoted the greater part of the past ten years to the study and investigation of psychical phenomena, concluded to go out and see the phenomena for himself. After spending a number of days in the house where the curious proceedings have been going on for over six weeks, Mr. Woodcock had a good opportunity to thoroughly investigate every phase of the phenomena. He declares it to be very serious indeed, being clearly a case of infestation of the weak organism of a child by a low order of spirit and one of the most marvellous cases on record. A full statement of his investigation will be made public in a few days. Mr. Woodcock arrived at Daggs' on Friday last and left there Monday at 3 o'clock and the report given by him is very interesting. The reports given through the newspapers concerning this affair have been almost incredible, but they pale before the developments that took place before and after Mr. Woodcock's arrival. His story, which is corroborated by seventeen residents of the neighborhood, is simply marvellous and stranger than the strangest works of fiction.

A MONTREAL BOODLER.

Bailiff Boldue, of the Water Department, Several Thousands Short.

MONTREAL, Nov. 25.—Honore Boldue, a bailiff in the employ of the city water department, has absconded, and is now in New York, as is learned by a telegram to a friend. The amount of his defalcation is unknown, but it will probably reach some thousands of dollars. Boldue is a married man, but has been separated from his wife for the past seven years. He leaves behind him a father 90 years of age. His method seems to have been to collect say five accounts and return four, then declare the other party had moved, keeping the amount of the fifth. Matters point plainly to some collusion between Boldue and the accountant, Lapierre, who absconded last winter and is now in New York.

The Poles Came Down.

INGERSOLL, Nov. 25.—At a special meeting of the Council on Monday evening of last week the Reliance Electric Light Company were notified to have their poles removed from the public streets by November 20th, otherwise the work would be done by the corporation at the expense of the company. Considerable speculation has been rife during the past week as to whether the Council would have the backbone to remove the poles in face of the opposition of the Gas Company which had purchased the Reliance Company's plant. The time extended by the Council expired Wednesday night at midnight and no movement was made by the company to remove the poles. At 1 o'clock yesterday morning a force of men was put on and by daylight the poles were down and the work completed without the slightest trouble or annoyance.

"The Easily Art of Self Defence."

Giving blows for blows, is often more thought of, than that other part of self defence, which consists in defending one's own system from the assaults of disease and contact. CATARRH,

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. NB—The treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

"There was a frog who lived in a spring, He caught such a cold he could not sing."

Poor, unfortunate Batrachian! In what a sad plight he must have been. And yet his misfortune was one that often befalls singers. Many a one finds, some among those who belong to the "genus homo," is utterly spoiled by "cold in the head," or on the lungs, or both combined. For the above mentioned "croak," if we are not aware that any remedy was ever devised, but we rejoice to know that all human singers may keep their heads clear and throats free by the timely use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, both of which are sold by druggists.

Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh in the Head, no matter of how long standing, while Dr. Sel. Inventgal, Bronchial, Throat and Lung Affections, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is positively unrivalled.

Dr. PIERCE'S PELLETS

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Coughs, Influenza.—The soothing properties of these medicaments render them well worthy of trial in all diseases of the respiratory organs. In common colds and influenza the Pills, taken internally, and the Ointment rubbed over the chest and throat, are exceedingly efficacious. When influenza is epidemic this treatment is the safest, most and surest. Holloway's Pills purify the blood, remove all obstacles to its free circulation through the lungs, relieve the congested air tubes, and render respiration free, without reducing the strength, irritating the nerves, or depressing the spirits; such are the ready means of saving suffering when anyone is afflicted with colds, coughs, bronchitis, and other chest complaints, by which so many persons are seriously and permanently afflicted in most countries.

BY-LAW No. 224.

A BY-LAW to provide for Draining Parts of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Concessions lying North of Twenty Side Line, in the Township of Amaranth, and for borrowing on the Credit of the Municipality the sum of $1,692.65 for completing the same.

Provisionally adopted the 23rd day of October, A.D. 1889.

WHEREAS a majority in number of the owners, as shown by the last Revised Assessment Roll, of the property hereinafter set forth to be benefited by the Drainage thereof, have petitioned the Council of the said Township of Amaranth praying that the Council will use the power with which they are invested by the 490th and following Sections of Chapter 184, Revised Statutes of Ontario, to Drain certain parts of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Concessions in the aforesaid Township of Amaranth.

AND WHEREAS, thereupon the said Council procured an examination to be made by Charles R. Wheelock, P.L.S., being a person competent for such purpose, of the said locality proposed to be drained, and has also procured plans and estimates of the work to be made, by the said Charles R. Wheelock, and an assessment to be made by him of the real property to be benefited by such drainage, stating, as nearly as he can the proportion of benefit which, in his opinion, will be derived in consequence of such drainage by every road and lot, or portion of lot, the said assessment so made being the assessment hereinafter by this By-Law enacted, to be assessed and levied upon the lots and parts of lots hereinafter in that behalf specially set forth and described, and the report of the said Charles R. Wheelock in respect thereof, and of the said Drainage, being as follows:

To the Reeve and Council of the Township of Amaranth:

GENTLEMEN,—I herewith submit the Plans, Profiles, Specifications and estimates of three Drains to be numbered 28, 29 and 30, Amaranth Drainage, all of which I consider beneficial to the Roads and Lands through which they pass.

Orangeville, October 21st, 1889.

of Mr. Barrows and Miss Reynolds, and——Mr. Pollard!" I suddenly exclaimed, taking perhaps the most courageous resolution of my life, "I must be hon.at with you. It is useless for me to deny that the manner and circumstances of your mother's death have made a great Lapression upon me; that I cannot, in spite of all explanations, but connect some special significance to the oath you were requested to take; and that, weakened as your mother may have been, something more terrible than the mere shock of hearing of her pastor's sudden decease must have occasioned emotions so intense as to end in death and delirium. If, therefore, you are willing to assure me, as your brother has done, that it was entirely a fancy of hers that you ever held any communication with Mr. Barrows at the mill, I will gladly promise to disabuse my mind of all unfavorable impressions, and even promise to stay here, if such be your desire, till the days of your trouble are over, and the body of your mother is laid in her grave."

"And has my brother given you such an assurance as you speak of?"

"He has," I returned.

"Then why do you ask one from me?"

Was it possible for me to tell him?

"If it was not enough coming from his lips, how could it be coming from mine?" he continued.

Shame and confusion kept me silent.

"Would it be?" he persisted, this time with feeling and something like a hint of eagerness in his voice.

I dared not say "Yes," and yet I must have the assurance I demanded, if ever I was to know peace again.

"You do not answer; but I think, I feel confident, you would believe my word Miss Sterling."

"I have asked for it," I returned.

He turned frightfully pale; it seemed as if he would speak, but the words did not come. I felt my heart growing sick, and as for him, he started violently away from my side, and took a turn or two up and down the room.

"I cannot deny what looks like an accusation," he declared at last, coming and standing before me with a sombre but determined air. "My pride alone is enough to deter me. Will you accept from me anything less. I am not such a man as my brother."

"I will accept your assurance that as the true friend to Ada Reynolds I may remain in this house without stain to her memory or love."

"Then you think——"

"No," said I, with a burst I could not control "I do not think; I do not want to think. do not make me, I entreat."

He smiled, a sad and fearful smile, and took another turn up and down the seemingly darkening room When he came back I was cold as marble, and almost as insensible.

"Miss Sterling," were his words, "do you remember a conversation we had this morning?"

"I bowed, with a sudden rush of hope that almost melted me again.

"In that conversation I made a solemn assertion; do you recollect what it was?"

"Yes," I looked, if I did not audibly reply.

"I make the assertion again—is it sufficient?" he asked.

At that moment it seemed to me that it was. I looked and felt as if a great weight had been lifted from my heart, and though he flushed deeply, as any man of spirit, let alone one of such a proud and aristocratic nature as his, would be apt to under the circumstances, I saw that he experienced a relief also, and giving way to an impulse I do not yet know whether to regret or not, I held out my hand, saying calmly:

"I will remain, Mr. Pollard."

As a rule it is not wise to tell all one knows, though it is always highly expedient to know all one tells.

Important To Workingmen.

ARTIZANS, mechanics, and laboring-man are liable to sudden accidents and injuries, as wounds, painful cords, stiff joints and lameness. To all thus troubled we recommend Hagyard's Yellow Oil, the handy and reliable pain cure for outward or internal use.

Gilliouddy—knowing—"Got a cold, eh?" What have you been taking for it?" Jimmu—wearily—"Oh, advice from twenty three hundred cranks." And Gilliouddy changed the subject.

Hoopskirts Again

may come into style, but it is hoped not. The transformation which will bring back that style of crinoline ought to be indefinitely postponed Transformations in the health of thousands of women throughout the country have taken place during the past few years. Pale, haggard, and dispirited, they have become bright-eyed and healthy. The secret? Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which cures all those chronic "weaknesses" and distressing ailments peculiar to women.

Diner—You have waited upon me very acceptably and I have enjoyed my meal thoroughly. You have behaved like a gentleman, and a gentleman you certainly are, notwithstanding your humble occupation. Waiter—I hope, sir, that I am a gentleman. I always try to be one. Diner—It is as I suspected. And being a gentleman, I shall not insult you by offering you money. Perhaps at some time I may be able to reciprocate your courtesy. Till then, farewell.

What is Wanted.

IS something that will make a man sleep well, eat well and rise in the morning refreshed and strong, with none of the worn out tired feeling ours to be found where constipation, dyspepsia or disease of the stomach, liver, bowels and blood exist. Burdock Blood Bitters meets every indication expressed above

WILL GIVE YOU
HEALTH!
A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world thereat and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, procured the specifics, and although it proved cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market; and absurdly enough to cure every ill from a simple debility. The great always put for a reliable class of domestic remedies is now filled with perfect satisfaction. The Hospital Remedies are unmeasurable at fault. The specific for CATARRH cures that and nothing else; so with the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLES; RHEUMATISM is cured by No. 8, while troubles of DIGESTION, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their own cure. To these is a 'dad' specific for FEVER and AGUE, one for FEMALE WEAKNESS—a GENERAL TONIC and BLOOD-MAKER that such a bless and LIVER FORM AND FULNESS, and an incomparable remedy for NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Poetry.

LOVE'S POWER.

If I were blind, and thou shouldst enter
E'er so softly in the room,
I should know it,
I should feel it,
Something subtle would reveal it,
And a glory round thee centre
That would lighten up the gloom.
And my heart would surely guide me,
With Love's second sight provide me,
One amid the crowd to find,
If I were blind!

If I were dead, and thou hadst spoken
Ere thy presence I had known,
I should know it,
I should feel it,
Something subtle would reveal it,
And the seal at once be broken
By Love's liquid undertone.
Deaf to other, stranger voices,
And the world's discordant noises—
Whisper, wheresoe'er thou art,
'Twill reach my heart!

If I were dead and thou shouldst venture
Near the coffin where I lay,
I should know it,
I should feel it,
Something subtle would reveal it,
And no look of mildest censure
Rest upon that face of clay.
Shouldst thou kiss me, conscious flashes
Of Love's fire through Death's cold ashes
Would give back the cheek its red,
If I were dead!

THE PRODIGAL DAUGHTER.

To the home of his father returning
The Prodigal, weary and worn,
Is greeted with joy and thanksgiving,
As when on his first natal morn;
A "robe" and a "ring" is his portion,
The servants as suppliants bow,
He is clad in fine linen and purple,
In return for his penitent vow.

But, ah! for the prodigal Daughter,
Who has wandered away from her home—
Her feet must still press the dark valley
And through the wild wilderness roam;
Alone on the bleak, barren mountains—
The mountains so dreary and cold—
No hand is outstretched in fond pity
To welcome her back to the fold.

But thanks to the Shepard, whose mercy
Still follows his sheep, though they stray,
The weakest, and e'en the forsaken,
He bears in his bosom away;
And in the bright mansions of glory,
Which the blood of his sacrifice won,
There is room for the Prodigal Daughter
As well as the Prodigal Son.

DECEMBER.

December's come and with her brought
A world in whitest marble wrought;
The trees and fence and all the posts
Stand motionless and white as ghosts,
And all the paths we used to know
Are hidden in the drifts of snow.
December brings the longest night
And cheats the day of half its light.
No bird song breaks the perfect hush;
No meadow-brook with liquid gush
Runs telling tales in babbling rhyme
Of liberty and summer time,
But frozen in its icy cell
Awaits the sun to break the spell.
Breathe once upon the window-glass
And see the strange mists that pass—
Fantastic shapes that go and come
Forever silvery and dumb.

December Santa Claus shall bring—
Of happy children happy king,
Who with his sleigh and reindeer steps
At all good people's chimney-tops.

Then let the holly rod be hung,
And all the sweetest carrols sung,
While we with joy remember there—
The journeyers to Bethlehem,
Who followed trusting from afar
The guidance of that happy star
Which marked the spot where Christ was born
Long years ago one Christmas morn!

CHAPTER VIII.

A FLOWER FROM THE POLLARD CONSERVATORY.

You may wear your rue with a difference.
—HAMLET.

Mrs. Harrington did not immediately recover from the shock she had received. I therefore found myself fully employed the next day. Towards evening, however, a respite came, and I took the opportunity for a stroll up street, as much for the sake of hearing the gossip of the town as to escape from the atmosphere of sorrow and perplexity by which I was surrounded.

My walk down to the gate was full of a certain uneasy apprehension. I had made no secret of my intentions at the supper table, and for the reason that neither of the brothers had ventured up on any reply to my remark, I expected one, if not both, of them to join me on the way. But I reached the last turn of the path without meeting anyone, and I was congratulating myself upon the prospect of having an hour of perfect freedom, when I detected, leaning on the gate before me, the firm well knit figure of a man.

As the two Pollards were more or less alike in form, I could not distinguish at first glance which of the brothers it was. I therefore faltered back a step and was indeed debating whether I should not give up my project and return to the house, when I saw the gentleman's head turn, and realized that it was too late to retreat. I therefore advanced with as much calmness as I could assume, determined not to vary my conduct, no matter which of the brothers it should turn out to be. But to my great surprise, the gentleman before me gave me no opportunity to test my resolution. No sooner did he perceive me than he made a hurried gesture that I did not at that moment understand; and, just lifting his hat in courteous farewell, vanished from my sight in the thick bushes which at that place encumbered the grounds.

"It was Dwight; it was Guy," I alternately explained to myself, and knew not whether it would give me most relief to find myself shunned by one or the other. My final conclusion, that I wished to have nothing further to do with either of them, received, notwithstanding, a rude shock when I arrived at the gate post. For there, on its broad top, lay a magnificent blossom, the choicest fruit of the hot house, and it was to beg my acceptance of this that the gentleman had made the peculiar gesture I had noticed—an act which, if it came from Dwight, certainly possessed a significance which I was not ready to ignore; while, if it proceeded from his cold and crafty brother—— But I would not allow myself to dwell upon that possibility. The flower must be mine, and if afterwards I found that it was to Guy I owed its possession, it would be time enough then for me to determine what to do. So I took the gorgeous blossom off the post and was speeding away down the street, when I was suddenly stopped by the thought that only Guy would have the egotism to bestow a gift upon me in this way; that Dwight if he had wished to present it at all, would have done so with his own hand, and not left it lying on a gate-post with the assurance it would be gathered up by the fortunate recipient of his favor.

Disgusted with myself and instantly alive to the possible consequences of my act, I opened my fingers with the laudable intention of dropping the flower to the ground, when I saw standing in the road directly in front of me the beautiful idiot boy whose peculiarities of appearance and conduct had so attracted my attention in the summer-house the day before. He was looking at me with a strange gaze of mingled curiosity and imbecile good nature, and his hands white as chalk, trembled in the air before him, as if he could scarcely restrain himself from snatching out of my grasp the rare flower I seemed so willing to throw away.

A happy impulse seized me.

"Here said I proffering him the blossom. "This will give you more pleasure than it will me."

But, to my great astonishment, he turned on his heel with a loud laugh, and then, shaking his head, and rolling it about from side to side, exclaimed, with his usual reptition:

"No, no; its a lover's gift; you will wear it in your hair." And he danced about me with grotesque gaysty for a moment, then glided away to a position from which he could still see me without being in reach of my hand.

Under these circumstances I was too proud to fling the flower away, so I dropped it into a basket I held, and walked swiftly down the street. The idiot boy followed me; now skipping a pace or two in advance, and now falling back till I had passed far beyond him. As he flashed back and forth, I saw that his eyes were always on my face, and once as I confronted him with mine, he broke out into a series of chuckles, and cried: "Do they like you now?" and laughed and danced, and laughed again till I began to find the situation some what embarrassing, and was glad enough when at the corner of a street he disappeared, from my view, with the final cry of: "One day, two days; wait till you have been there ten; wait till you have been there twenty!"

Hot and trembling with apprehension lest his foolish speeches had been heard by some passer by, I hurried on my way to the house where I lived. I reached it in a few minutes, and being so fortunate as to find my landlady in, succeeded before another half-hour had passed in learning all that was generally known about the serious occurrences in which I was just then so profoundly interested.

I heard first that the vat in the old mill had been examined for the purpose of ascertaining how it came to be full enough of water to drown a man; and that it was found that, owing to heavy storm which had lately devastated the the country, a portion of the wall above the vat had been broken in by a falling tree, allowing the rain to enter in floods from a jutting portion of the roof. Next that although an inquest had been held over Mr. Barrows' remains, and a verdict had been given of accidental death, the common judgment of the community ascribed his end to suicide. This was mainly owing to the fact that the woman in whose house he had lived testified to having observed a great change in his appearance during the last few weeks; a change which many were now ready to allow they had themselves perceived; though, from the fact of its having escaped the attention of Ada, I cannot but think they were greatly helped to this conclusion by their own imagination.

The last thing I made sure of was that the two deaths which had followed his so tragically had awakened on all sides the deepest interest and pity, but nothing more. That although the general features of Mrs. Pollard's end were well enough known, no whisper of suspicion had been breathed against her or hers, that showed in the faintest way that any doubt mingled with the general feeling of commiseration. And yet it was too evident she was no favorite with the world at large, and that the respect with which she was universally mentioned was rather the result of the pride felt in her commanding manners and position, than from any personal liking for the woman herself.

As for the sons, they were fine young men in their way, and had the sympathy of everybody in their bereavement; but gossip, if it busied itself at all, was much more interested in wondering what disposition they would make of the property now coming to them, than in inquiring whether or not they could have had any secret relations with the man now dead, which was calculated to explain in any way his mysterious end.

Finally I learned that Ada and Mr. Barrows were to be buried the next day.

Satisfied with the information obtained, I started immediately for the Pollard mansion. It was my wish to re enter it before dark. But the twilight fell fast, and by the time I reached the gate I could scarcely discern that a masculine figure was again leaning there, waiting, as it appeared, for my return. The discovery caused me a sensation of relief. Now I should at least learn which of the two brothers showed this interest in my movements, for this time the gentleman betrayed no disposition to leave at my approach; on the contrary, he advanced and in the mellow accents I had learned in so short a time to listen for, observed:

"I knew you wished to go alone, Miss Sterling, or I should have offered you my protection in your dismal walk. I am glad to see you return before it is quite dark."

"Thank you," I responded, with almost a degree of joyousness in my tone, I was so glad to be rid of the perplexity that had weighed down my spirits for the last half hour. "It is not pleasant to walk the streets at dusk alone, but necessity has accustomed me to it, and I scarcely think of its dangers now."

"You utter that in a proud tone," he declared, reaching out and taking the basket that hung on my arm.

"I have reason to," I replied, glad it was so dark he could not see the blush which his action had caused. "It was no slight struggle for me to overcome certain prejudices in which I have been reared. That I have been able to do so gives me wholesome satisfaction. I am no longer ashamed to own that I stand by myself, and work for every benefit I obtain."

"Nor need you be," he murmured. "In this age and in this country a woman like you forfeits nothing by maintaining her own independence. On the contrary, she gains something, and that is the respect of every true-hearted man that knows." And his step lagged more and more in spite of my conscientious efforts to maintain the brisk pace in which I had indulged before I had encountered him at the gate.

"This is a grand old place," I remarked, vaguely anxious to change the drift of the conversation.

"Yes," he answered, moodily; "but it is shadowed." And with a sudden relapse into his most sombre self, he walked at my side in silence till the sight of the high porch showing itself through the trees warned him that if he had anything further to say to me, it must be said soon. He therefore paused, forcing me by the action to pause too, and earnestly observed: "I know, however you may address me, Miss Sterling, you cherish a doubt of me in your heart. I can not resent this, much as my natural pride might prompt me to do so. During the short time I have known you, you have won so deeply upon my esteem, that the utmost which I feel able to ask of you under the circumstances is, that, in the two or three days you will yet remain with us, you will allow yourself but one thought concerning me, and that is, that I aspire to be an honest man, and to do not only what the world thinks right, but even what a conscientious soul like yours must consider so. Are you willing to regard me in this light, and will my mere word be sufficient to cause you to do so?"

It was a searching question after his proffer, and my acceptance of the flower I held concealed, and I hesitated a moment before replying to it. I am so intensely proud; and then I could not but acknowledge to myself that, whatever my excuse, I was certainly running a risk of no ordinary nature in listening to the addresses of a man who could inspire me, or ever had inspired me, with the faintest element of distrust.

He noted my silence and drew back; uttering a sigh that was half impatient and half sorrowful. I felt this sigh, nondescript as it was, re echo painfully in my heart; and hung my head in remorse but not before I had caught a glimpse of his face, and been struck by its expression of deep melancholy.

"You have no favor to show me then?" he asked.

Instantly and without premeditation I seized upon the basket he held in his hand and impetuously opened the lid.

"Have I not shown you one?" I cuquired.

A sound it never came from him or from me—made us both start. With a fierce expression he turned towards the bushes at our right, but not before I had seen, by the look of astonishment he had cast upon the flower, that, notwithstanding the coincidence of finding him at the gate, he had nothing to do with its culling or presentation.

"Some one is presuming to play the spy upon us," said he, and drawing my hand through his arm, he led me swiftly towards the porch. "You need not tremble so," he whispered, as we halted an instant between the cedars before mounting the steep steps. "No one in this house wishes to annoy you—or if there should be any one who does," he corrected in a quick tone, while he cast a glance of quick suspicion at the basket in my hand, "that person and I will soon come to an understanding."

"I was only startled," was my quick rejoinder, glad to explain my tremulousness in this way. "Let us go in," I added, feeling that I must escape to some place of solitude, if only to hide my shame and chagrin from every eye.

He acquiesced in my wishes at once and we were proceeding slowly up the steps, when suddenly a shrill strange laugh broke from amid the bushes, and the weird voice of the idiot boy, whom I thought had been left behind me in the town, rose once more to my ear, uttering those same words which had so annoyed me earlier in the evening.

"Oh, do you think they love you now? Say, say, do you think they like you now?" But the tone with which he addressed me this time had a ring of menace in it, and I was not surprised to see Dwight Pollard start, though I was affected by the deep agitation he showed as I tried to explain:

"Oh, it is only the idiot boy whom you must have seen running about the streets. He seems to have taken a fancy to me, for he followed me nearly all the while I was gone, with something of the same senseless remarks as now."

"The idiot boy!" repeated Mr. Pollard. "Well, we will leave the idiot boy outside." And he held the door open till I had hurried in, when he vehemently closed it, looking at the same time as if he had shut the door on a threatening evil, or, at the most, on a bitter and haunting memory.

That night I did an unworthy thing; I listened to conversation which was not intended for my ears. It happened in this wise: I had been down stairs on an errand for Mrs. Harrington, and was coming back through the dimly lighted hall, when I saw Dwight Pollard step out of a room in front of me and assist a man that was locking and bolting the front door.

"Simon," I heard him say, "You remember that beautiful flower I noticed yesterday in the conservatory?"

"Yes, sir," the man replied, with some embarrassment in his voice.

"Well, I want it picked to-morrow for my mother's funeral. You will bring it to my room."

"Oh, sir," I heard the man hurriedly interpose, "I'm sure I'm very sorry, sir; but it has already been picked, and there won't be another out before next week."

I knew I ought not to stay there and listen, especially as I could easily have gone on my way without attracting attention, but having heard this much, I found it impossible to go on till I had at least learned if Mr. Pollard had the motive I suspected in these inquiries of his. His next words satisfied me on this point.

"And who was the fortunate one to claim this flower?" he asked, in an accent indifferent enough to deceive a merely casual listener.

"Mr. Guy, sir."

"Ah, so he noticed it too!" was the remark with which Mr. Pollard dropped the subject, and hurried away from the gardener's side.

The next instant I perceived him pass into Guy's room, and I saw that an explanation of some kind was about to take place between the brothers.

A WOMAN'S JUDGMENT.

An elderly couple entered a dry goods store on Woodward avenue yesterday. He was slim and tall and she was round and short.

"My wife and I have come to do some shopping," he said to the clerk.

"Indeed?"

"Yes; my wife wants a new dress to take home."

"Ah?"

"Just show her what you have. Let her select whatever she wants."

"What line of goods will you have madam?" asked the clerk.

"Oh, something in silk," answered the husband for her.

The clerk took down a roll of bright colored pattern.

"How does that please you, madam," he asked.

"No, that is too bright," said the husband.

"How do you like this, madam?" asked the clerk, displaying another roll.

"No, my wife doesn't like that," he returned. "It is too dark."

Again and again the clerk displayed his wares before them, always appealing to the taste of the wife and being answered by the husband.

"Well, said the latter at length, "I guess this piece will do. Wrap it up."

When they were on the street he remarked to his wife:

"That's a nice piece of goods you selected, Mary."

A look of quiet humor stole into the old lady's eyes, but she merely answered quietly, as she gazed affectionately into his face:

"Do you think so, John?"

MUNICIPAL MATTERS.

THE time has arrived when aspirants for municipal honors are making themselves known. And the chances for lively times in Orangeville on polling day are exceedingly bright.

Mayor Gilchrist has publicly announced himself out of the field, and he hopes the ratepayers will elect a good, honest mayor for 1890. Mr. Gilchrist has occupied the civic chair for the past two years, and now retires on his laurels. Several prominent citizens have their eyes on that office. Messrs. W. L. Walsh, J. Lindsay and Jos. Foster are spoken of as likely candidates.

Mr. Foster also intends to resign the reeveship. Mr. Lindsay and Mr. H. Endicott will probably enter the arena and battle for the second highest office in the town's government.

Mr. John Kearns, the present deputy reeve, is almost sure to remain where he is, as no aspirants for his throne have come to light.

There is a possibility of Messrs. Youmans, Ketchum, and Bailey and Coleman again representing the North and East wards. In the South, Messrs. King, May and Pinkney are said to be in the field; while Dr. Smith and H. Gillespie are the only names mentioned in the West.

The adjoining townships are very quiet at present, but will come to the front in due time.

However, when nomination day comes around, THE SUN will shine on the deserving candidates.

A BREEZY SESSION.

Important Business transacted by the Aldermen on Monday night.

All the councillors were present at the regular monthly meeting of the town parliament on Monday night. Two more meetings will be held and then the new council will take the floor.

When everything was ready, the clerk read the minutes of last meeting, which were confirmed. The mayor read from R. F. West, $35; Fuller & Allen, $1 50; D. McDonald, $1; ordered to be paid. Accounts from Russell & Hutchison, $7 40; Advertiser, $3 30; referred.

ACCOUNTS

COMMUNICATIONS.

Wm. Shannon, a superannuated Methodist minister, asked that the amount of his taxes be refunded. Referred to the Assessment committee.

A. G. Hill, of Niagara Falls, wanted numerous questions answered regarding this town. He is making a comparison between Niagara Falls and other towns throughout Ontario. Referred to Finance committee.

REPORTS.

Mr. Lindsay produced the treasurer's statement for October, and a report of the recent tax sale.

Mr. King brought in the R. & B report. He asked permission to pay all the R. & B accounts, which, he said, amounted to about $35. This report was the cause of a prolonged debate between Reeve Foster and several members of the council. The mayor read the report and remarked that it would take a Philadelphia lawyer to prepare such a document, and he laughed long and loud. The reeve moved to have the report left over till the next meeting. A vote was taken and the report adopted.

BY LAWS.

Mr. Ketchum introduced a by-law providing for holding the municipal elections and appointing returning officers. Below will be found a list of the polling places and returning officers:

North ward—town hall, W. Fremlin, returning officer; South ward—McKown's machine store, Geo. Irwin, returning officer; East ward—Spence's mills works, H. Fisher, returning officer; West ward—Daniels' shop, W. Daniels, returning officer. The by-law was read a third time and passed.

Ald. Youmans then brought forth his famous by-law to consolidate the nominations. The by-law received its third reading. Nominations for mayor, reeve, deputy reeve, councillors and school trustees will hereafter take place in the town hall at 7:30 p. m. This is an important fact and voters should make a note of the change.

Knox returning officer will receive $3 and his clerk $2.

The council then adjourned.

STRANGLED TO DEATH.

Horrible Execution of Harvey the Greek Murderer.

The last act in the Harvey tragedy was enacted last Friday morning at 8 o'clock. During the night Archdeacon Dixon passed a few hours giving the doomed man consolation, this morning he again assisted him and bade him good-bye. Harvey bade the jail officials good-bye, and spent his few remaining hours in spiritual conversation. Harvey slept and ate a hearty breakfast. About 7.55 the hangman entered his cell and pinioned his arms, and the procession, headed by Archdeacon Dixon, followed by the prisoner, sheriff and hangman, marched to the place of execution. Harvey looked dejected, and only looked up once as he neared the gallows. The prayers for the dead of the English Church were offered by the archdeacon, during the preformance of which the black cap was fastened over Harvey's head, and the rope was cut. It was one of the worst pieces of bungling that has ever been witnessed at an execution. The weight which lifted the body was not heavy enough to give sufficient rebound to break the neck and the contortions of the unhappy man were frightful as he slowly strangled to death. Those present could not but express themselves as to the bungling way the executioner did his part of the sad act. The knot had slipped and caught in front of the ear and the gurgling sounds of the suffering man could be heard outside the gaol wall, and many of those who witnessed the execution left the place as soon as they possibly could.

At 10 30 a. m. Coroner Keating held an inquest over the remains of Harvey. Dr. Herod in his evidence severely commented on the bungling manner in which the execution was done. He felt Harvey's pulse after he had been hanging seven minutes and found it at 60. Harvey was conscious at the time, he thought, from the pulse, from the grasp of the hand and from the movements of the body. He made a special examination of the corpse and found that the neck was not dislocated. The jury found that Harvey had died according to law, and recommended that the Government be asked to consider the advisability of employing an official expert executioner. The remains were handed over to Dr. Lett and Archdeacon Dixon and the funeral took place from the jail to the English church cemetery, where the body was interred beside that of Mrs. Harvey and those of Lily and Geraldine. The funeral was strictly private. The papers in Harvey's hand at the time he was hanged were a letter from Geraldine in refrence to a coming anniversary and a portion of a letter from his son saying he forgave him.

A CURIOUS FIND AT ST. CATHARINES.

As Mr. Henry Smith was digging up the earth around the mineral bath-pipes in the rear of the Welland House on Saturday evening last, he unearthed a tin cash box closely bound with wire. It bore the initials "V. R," and underneath was an inscription of some kind which was almost eaten away with rust. The date, however, was quite distinct 1858. The box was taken into the hotel office, where, on examination, it was found to contain $3,500 in bills of the now defunct Zimmerman Bank, and $32 in lawful coin of our realm. The bills, silver and coppers were very much worn and rusted. It is supposed to have been the property of a Col. Victor Reynolds, who boarded at the Welland House over thirty years ago, when Zimmerman Bank money was as good as gold. The Colonel afterwards disappeared, and nothing more was heard of him. He no doubt passed away with thousands of others in the bloody Civil War.

ACCUSED OF POISONING.—Mrs. A. R. Edwards was arrested a day or two ago and taken to Clinton, charged with having poisoned her first husband, Hugh J. Whitley. Whitley died in May of the present year, and about three weeks ago Mrs. Whitley was married to A. R. Edwards, of Woodstock. The principal witness against the accused is a girl named Annie Johnston, who was employed as a domestic in Whitley's house during his illness. She swore that she saw Mrs. Whitley put arsenic in her husband's food on more than one occasion, and that she heard Mrs. Whitley say it was no harm to kill such a man. Mrs. Whitley, or Mrs. Edwards, was committed for trial by two Clinton Justices of the Peace.

A fatal accident occured at Trenton on Saturday afternoon, in the large block on the east side of the river now nearing completion. As Hugh O'Rourke, the owner, was ascending a scaffold on the inside of the building he slipped and fell a distance of about twelve feet, striking the floor with his head, dislocating his neck and causing almost instant death.

Deceased was a man of kindly nature, ever willing to oblige a neighbor and always ready to help the worthy poor. All will miss him, but those nearest to him will miss him most. ## Saturday Night's Christmas Number.

Toronto Saturday Night's Christmas Number just issued is the most artistic number ever printed in Canada. It consists of forty pages of pictures, song and story, all original and illustrative of Canadian life, and one which when mailed to friends in the old land will not compare unfavorably with the best productions of London and Paris. A dozen full-page illustrations, all by Canadian artists and engraved and lithographed without regard to expense, will lend a great attractiveness to the edition, and in every page some charming picture relieves the text. A host of poets, fiction writers and essayists have contributed, while sketches, fairy tales and many charming things for children are provided for by other contributors. This holiday number so far surpasses the one issued last year by Saturday Night that no comparison can be made.

If you wish to send a Christmas souvenir to a friend abroad, nothing will be more appreciated than Saturday Night's holiday number. The art pictures are not copies of Old Country engravings, nor a job lot of lithographs, but exquisite photogravures of Canadian subjects. Not a line of reprint nor a copied picture appears in the whole forty pages. The paper throughout is heavily glazed; the printing cannot be excelled, and the cover, with its heavy, gold margin, contains a realistic Rocky Mountain Sketch Price, thirty cents at all book stores or address. The Sheppard Publishing Co. 9 Adelaide St. West, Toronto.

ADS. AND DODGERS.

The little special "notice,"
The little "business ad,"
Make the mighty merchant
And his patrons glad.
Then the double column
Of "extra big display"
Follows closely after
In a natural way;
And the eager public
Gathering in throngs
Leave their business orders
Where the trade belongs.
But the dodger nuisance
Keeps about his biz,
Wonders how it happens
Things are as they is;
Scattered on the sidewalk,
Blown about the street
Crumpled into tatters,
Trampled under feet:
So the useless dodger
Quickly meets its doom,
While the advertiser
Greets a lively boom.
The little "special notice"
And "business ad." are game;
They are cheap and plain to look at,
But get there just the same.

A FATAL SHOT.

OWEN SOUND, Dec. 4.—A fatal shooting accident occurred yesterday afternoon near Dyers Bay, on the Saugeen Peninsula. It appears that two young men named Alexander Kennedy, of the firm of Wm. Kennedy & Sons, and Hiram Lymburner, of Owen Sound, were out after game. The bush being pretty thick, Kennedy saw what he supposed to be a deer and taking deliberate aim, fired at the object, when to his horror he discovered he had shot his companion, Lymburner, through the back. The wounded man only lived a few minutes. He leaves a wife and two children.

COLD IN HEAD | THE 4 STAGES. | CONSUMPTION

CATARRH | DEATH.

There is positive danger to health and life in neglecting a case of Cold in the Head or Catarrh, and at this season with its changeable weather, unusual moisture and sudden changes from heat to cold, there is peculiar liability to cold in the head. A neglected case of Cold in the Head rapidly developes into Catarrh, and neglected Catarrh just as rapidly develops into Consumption and leads to premature death. Medical testimony proves conclusively that a large percentage of all the deaths occurring from Consumption had their origin in a neglected Cold, which, by a gradual progress, developed into Catarrh, then into Consumption, that dread disease with which medical science is as yet unable to cope successfully. If you are suffering from Cold in the head, or from any of the symptoms of Catarrh, such as foul breath, dull oppressive headaches, droppings from the nose into the throat, hawking and spitting, copious discharges from the nostrils, losing sense of smell, or taste becoming dull, hacking cough, or a general feeling of debility, hoarse voice, wheezing or cracking sound in your chest when breathing, a feeling of dizziness, particularly when stooping, a feeling of tiredness and indisposition to exertion, a feeling of nausea in the morning when attempting to dislodge accumulations in the throat, you need neglect them no longer. These are but a few of the many symptoms of Catarrh, and if you do not neglect them you can not possibly mistake the character of the disease. Do not permit them to run under the delusion impression that the disease will eventually wear away. It will not, but on the contrary will wear you away as it has thousands before. Procure at once a bottle of NASAL BALM, the only certain and speedy cure ever offered to the public for Cold in the Head and Catarrh. This is no idle assertion, but an unquestionable fact, which is verified by thousands of testimonials in our possession telling of marvellous cures. These testimonials we have received from all parts of the Dominion, and we append a few, selected at random, as a fair sample of the whole:—

Mr. Alex. Burns, of Sodbury, Ont., says: Gentlemen, I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh for seven or eight years, and was annoyed with consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears, and sickening pain in the head directly over either eye. I used snuffs and powders and douches, but all in no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the same symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm are sweet breath, stoppage of the droppings into the throat (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the "Balm" will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

James H. McLeod, Mink River Road, N. B., says:—I have tried other remedies for Catarrh, but received little or no good from them. Your NASAL BALM is certainly the BEST REMEDY I have tried, and all you claim for it. The fact that it is pleasant and convenient to use adds greatly to its value, but its chief worth lies in being a CERTAIN CURE for that unpleasant disease—Catarrh.

Wm. Chas. Hanley, postmaster, Spry Bay, N. S., says:—I submit the following to the public that any who may be afflicted may be benefited by the same remedy. Two bottles of your NASAL BALM has RESTORED to PERFECT HEALTH a four year old child of ours, suffering from Catarrh.

Henrietta Blackwell Parker, Ont., says:—Your NASAL BALM is the BEST REMEDY I have ever used for Catarrh. I can breathe more freely than before and my health has regained its sweetness. I consider NASAL BALM a boon to the suffering.

A CAUTION:—Beware of imitations. If your dealer has not got NASAL BALM in stock do not let him persuade you to take any other remedy which he may say is just as good, but send direct to the undersigned and it will be sent you on receipt of price—50 cents and $1.00 per bottle.

BY-LAW No. 224.

A BY-LAW to provide for Draining Parts of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Concessions lying North of Twenty Side Line, in the Township of Amaranth, and for borrowing on the Credit of the Municipality the sum of $1,692.65 for completing the same.

Provisionally adopted the 23rd day of October, A.D. 1889.

WHEREAS a majority in number of the owners, as shown by the last Revised Assessment Roll, of the property hereinafter set forth to be benefited by the Drainage thereof, have petitioned the Council of the said Township of Amaranth praying that the Council will use the power with which they are invested by the 549th and following Sections of Chapter 184, Revised Statutes of Ontario, to Drain certain parts of the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth and Seventh Concessions in the aforesaid Township of Amaranth.

AND WHEREAS therefore the said Council proceeded as examination to be made by Charles R. Wheelock, P.L.S., being a person competent for such purpose, of the said locality proposed to be drained, and has also procured plans and estimates of the work to be made, by the said Charles R. Wheelock, and an assessment to be made by him of the real property to be benefited by such drainage, stating, as nearly as he can the proportion of benefit which, in his opinion, will be derived in consequence of such drainage by every road and lot, or portion of lot, the said assessment so made being the assessment hereinafter in this By-Law enacted, to be assessed and levied upon the lots and parts of lots hereinafter in that behalf specially set forth and described, and the report of the said Charles R. Wheelock in respect thereof, and of the said Drainage, being as follows:

To the Reeve and Council of the Township of Amaranth:

GENTLEMEN,—I herewith submit the Plans, Profiles, Specifications and estimates of three Drains, to be numbered 28, 29 and 30, Amaranth Drainage, all of which I consider beneficial to the Roads and Lands through which they pass.

1st. That the said report, plans and estimates be adopted and the said drains and works connected therewith be made and constructed in accordance therewith.

ONLY A DREAM.

Rosy clouds, deepened with silver,
Floated thro' the summer sky,
Me low with departing sunlight,
Dusky twilight drawing nigh.

Once again, thy arms around me,
Once again, clasped to thy heart,
Thou'st sweet words of love that bound me,
Of thy life and soul a part.

Deep, grey eyes so fondly gazing
Into mine, can read each thought—
"All the pain that you have caused me—
All the sorrow you have wrought,

I forgive, and love you still!"
Thus the words you spake to me
As I lay upon your breast,
Weeping, so remorsefully.

But, my tears are kissed away,
I feel thy warm breath on my face,
And love thee, as I did always,
And rest in my old resting place.

But what, ah! what is this?
It is the mornings' sunlight gleam!
My lips still warm with thy last kiss,
Ah! must I wake and find 'tis but a dream?

A dream? I start in bitterness,
All is so real, and I am unforgiven,
Gladly I would die, could I but think
My dream would be reality in Heaven!

"BOYS WILL BE BOYS."

"Boys will be boys," We resent the old saying
Current with men;
Let it be heard, in excuse for our straying,
Never again!
Ours is a hope that is higher and clearer,
Ours is a purpose far brighter and dearer,
Ours is a name that should silence the jeerer,
We will men!

"Boys will be boys" is an unworthy slander;
Boys will be men!
The spirit of Philip in young Alexander,
Killed again!
As the years of our youth fly swiftly away,
As brightens about us the light of life's day,
As the glory of manhood dawns on us, we say
We will be men!

"Boys will be boys!" Yes! if boys may be pure
Models for men;
If their thoughts may be modest, their truthfulness sure,
Say it again!
If boys will be boys such as boys ought to be—
Boys full of sweet-minded, light-hearted glee
Let boys be boys, brave, loving and free
Till they are men!

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Notes from the American Capital by Our own Correspondent.

The instructions received by the British delegates to the International Conference, to change their exclusive attitude and enter the discussions on the same footing with the representatives of other nations, will gratify everybody interested in the proceedings of the conference. It is safe to say, however, that this movement is not so much the result of a change of heart on the part of Great Britain as of the discovery that she is able to control the actions of the conference to a very large extent whenever she sees fit to exercise the power. It is a fact which has been generally recognized ever since the meetings began, that the British delegates come here uncommonly well fortified with facts and figures and arguments; so that, whenever a topic arose in which their country's interests were touched in the slightest degree they were on their feet in an instant and ready for action. The result has been that their influence has been largely felt in everything the conference has done thus far; and, having learned that England's conservative ideas are not going to be overridden, and her buoy system and other time-honored maritime institutions ruthlessly brushed aside for half-developed innovations, they have convinced their government that nothing serious is to be feared from giving them authority to take part in all branches of discussion. The extension of their powers is a good thing for all; for the debates on many questions of supreme interest to the merchant marine conducted without the participation of the greatest commercial nation on the globe; would be something like "Hamlet" with Hamlet left out.

President Harrison has decided not to risk his annual message in the hands of the printers until after it has been sent to the two Houses of Congress. The constitutional requirements make it necessary that written copies be transmitted to the Senate and House, but the practice heretofore has been to print a large number of copies in advance for the use of the daily newspapers. These copies were distributed by the press associations with the understanding that they were not to be used until the "release" was telegraphed from this city, which occurred as soon as the Clerks of the House began reading the message to Congress. The President mistrusts that his first message might be prematurely published, and he will take no chances. Extra type written copies will be prepared by the White House clerks, and the press associations will be furnished with these in time for transmission by telegraph before the afternoon papers go to press. Inconvenience will result from these precautions for the reason that the press wires will be blocked with the message to the exclusion of other news on the day the message is sent to Congress. President Cleveland's method in regard to his message was a perfectly safe one, and yet convient for all parties. The press associations furnished the addresses of the newspapers they represented. A copy was sent for each paper to the local postmaster, who was instructed to deliver it at noon on the day it was read before Congress. Of course no postmaster would risk his position by premature delivery of the document, in it was a satisfactory arrangement all around.

Judge Cooley, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, informs the public that passengers on railroads are charged more than a fair profit on their transportation, and also gives the causes of such overcharge. He shows that large numbers of persons are carried free, that the privilege of granting excursion rates is abused, and that the support of an army of "scalpers" or ticket brokers is such a tax on railway business that the vast multitude of ordinary passengers have to pay rates that are more than a fair remuneration for the service performed. This matter becomes of special interest at the present time, because it is understood that the commission will make it the subject of a representation to Congress at its coming session, exacting more than regular and reasonable passenger rates. Whether the discriminations complained of can be removed by legislation may be questioned, but beyond doubt an effort will be made to place some of the difficult problems of passenger transportation within the control of the Interstate Commission.

The Pan American Congress has returned in safety from its extended swing around the circle and possessed of a large additional stock of knowledge concerning the products, resources, and progress of the country. It is worthy of special note that this remarkable journey, the first of its kind in our history, has been accomplished strictly according to the the schedule agreed upon at the start, and without a break or accident. ## Poetry.

ONLY A DREAM.

Rosy clouds, deepened with silver,
Floated over the summer sky,
Me low with departing sunlight,
Dusky twilight drawing nigh.

Once again, thy arms around me,
Once again, clinged to thy heart,
The old sweet words of love that bound me,
Of thy life and soul a part.

Deep, grey eyes so fondly gazing
Into mine, can read each thought—
"All the pain that you have caused me—
All the sorrow you have wrought,

I forgive, and love you still!"
Thus the words you spake to me
As I lay upon your breast,
Weeping, so remorsefully.

But, my tears are kissed away,
I feel thy warm breath on my face,
And love thee, as I did always,
And rest in my old resting place.

But what, ah! what is this?
It is the mornings' sunlight gleam?
My lips still warm with thy last kiss,
Ah! must I wake and find 'tis but a dream?

A dream? I start in bitterness,
All is so real, and I am unforgiven,
Gladly I would die, could I but think
My dream would be reality in Heaven!

"BOYS WILL BE BOYS."

"Boys will be boys," We resent the old saying
Current with men;
Let it be heard, in excuse for our straying,
Never again!
Ours is a hope that is higher and clearer,
Ours is a purpose far brighter and dearer,
Ours is a name that should silence the jeerer,
We will men!

"Boys will be boys" is an unworthy slander;
Boys will be men!
The spirit of Philip in young Alexander,
Killed again!
As the years of our youth fly swiftly away,
As brightens about us the light of life's day,
As the glory of manhood dawns on us, we say
We will be men!

"Boys will be boys!" Yes! if boys may be pure
Models for men;
If their thoughts may be modest, their truthfulness sure,
Say it again!
If boys will be boys such as boys ought to be—
Boys full of sweet-minded, light-hearted glee
Let boys be boys, brave, loving and free
Till they are men!

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Notes from the American Capital by Our own Correspondent.

The instructions received by the British delegates to the International Conference, to change their exclusive attitude and enter the discussions on the same footing with the representatives of other nations, will gratify everybody interested in the proceedings of the conference. It is safe to say, however, that this movement is not so much the result of a change of heart on the part of Great Britain as of the discoverery that she is able to control the actions of the conference to a very large extent whenever she sees fit to exercise the power. It is a fact which has been generally recognized ever since the meetings began, that the British delegates come here uncommonly well fortified with facts and figures and arguments; so that, whenever a topic arose in which their country's interests were touched in the slightest degree they were on their feet in an instant and ready for action. The result has been that their influence has been largely felt in everything the conference has done thus far; and, having learned that England's conservative ideas are not going to be overridden, and her buoy system and other time-honored maritime institutions ruthlessly brushed aside for half-developed innovations, they have convinced their government that nothing serious is to be feared from giving them authority to take part in all branches of discussion. The extension of their powers is a good thing for all; for the debates on many questions of supreme interest to the merchant marine conducted without the participation of the greatest commercial nation on the globe; would be something like "Hamlet" with Hamlet left out.

President Harrison has decided not to risk his annual message in the hands of the printers until after it has been sent to the two Houses of Congress. The constitutional requirements make it necessary that written copies be transmitted to the Senate and House, but the practice heretofore has been to print a large number of copies in advance for the use of the daily newspapers. These copies were distributed by the press associations with the understanding that they were not to be used until the "release" was telegraphed from this city, which occurred as soon as the Clerks of the House began reading the message to Congress. The President mistrusts that his first message might be prematurely published, and he will take no chances. Extra type written copies will be prepared by the White House clerks, and the press associations will be furnished with these in time for transmission by telegraph before the afternoon papers go to press. Inconvenience will result from these precautions for the reason that the press wires will be blocked with the message to the exclusion of other news on the day the message is sent to Congress. President Cleveland's method in regard to his message was a perfectly safe one, and yet convient for all parties. The press associations furnished the addresses of the newspapers they represented. A copy was sent for each paper to the local postmaster, who was instructed to deliver it at noon on the day it was read before Congress. Of course no postmaster would risk his position by premature delivery of the document, in it was a satisfactory arrangement all around.

Judge Cooley, the chairman of the Interstate Commerce Commission, informs the public that passengers on railroads are charged more than a fair profit on their transportation, and also gives the causes of such overcharge. He shows that large numbers of persons are carried free, that the privilege of granting excursion rates is abused, and that the support of an army of "scalpers" or ticket brokers is such a tax on railway business that the vast multitude of ordinary passengers have to pay rates that are more than a fair remuneration for the service performed. This matter becomes of special interest at the present time, because it is understood that the commission will make it the subject of a representation to Congress at its coming session, exacting more than regular and reasonable passenger rates. Whether the discriminations complained of can be removed by legislation may be questioned, but beyond doubt an effort will be made to place some of the difficult problems of passenger transportation within the control of the Interstate Commission.

The Pan American Congress has returned in safety from its extended swing around the circle and possessed of a large additional stock of knowledge concerning the products, resources, and progress of the country. It is worthy of special note that this remarkable journey, the first of its kind in our history, has been accomplished strictly according to the schedule agreed upon at the start, and without a break or accident. ### A Night Alarm.

I AWOKE last night to find my little boy so bad with croup that he could hardly breathe, but on giving him some Hagyard's Yellow Oil on sugar, and rubbing his chest, throat and back with it also, he soon was sleeping quietly and awoke next morning completely cured. JOHN ELLIOT, Elginton, Ont.

A Plain Statement.

ALL poisonous waste, and worn out matter ought to escape from the system through the secretions of the bowels, kidneys and skin. B B B cleanses, opens and regulates these natural outlets for the removal of disease.

Miss Gotham—O, Miss Boston, I am making a crazy quilt.

Miss Boston—Indeed? I never made but one imbecile coverlet.

CONSUMPTION may be more easily prevented than cured. The irritating and harassing cough will be greatly relieved by the use of Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam that cures coughs, colds, bronchitis and pulmonary troubles.

S1. HOSPITAL REMEDIES S1.
WILL GIVE YOU
HEALTH!
A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of scientific knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their personal services are offered at the price of the unscrupulous patent medicines that flood the market, and should be in every family on a single bottle. The great change put for a reliable class of domestic remedies is now filled with perfect satisfaction. The Hospital Remedies prove an unreasonable claim. The specific for CATARRH cures that and nothing else; so with the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLES; RHEUMATISM is overcome by No. 3, a kidney trouble of DIGESTION, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their own cure. To these in a dual sense specific for FEVER and AGUE, one for FEMALE WEAKNESS—a GENERAL TONIC and BLOOD MAKER that such a wide and LIVES FORM AND FULNESS, and an incomparable remedy for NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Long-Standing

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 79 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. Furbush, Haverhill, Mass.

Poetry.

THE SNOW ANGEL.

The sleigh-bells thrilled that winter night,
Old Brattleborough rang with glee;
The windows overflowed with light,
Joy ruled each hearth and Christmas tree.
But to one the bells and mirth were taught;
His soul with deeper joy was fraught.

He waited until the guests were gone;
He waited to dream his dream alone;
And the night were on!

Alone he stands in the silent night;
He piles the snow in the village square;
With spade for chisel, a statue white
From the crystal quarry rises fair.
The light, save the stars, to guide his hand,
But the image obeys his soul's command.

The sky is draped with heavy lawn,
The stars grow pale in the early dawn,
But the lad tolls on.

And lo! in the morn the people came
To gaze at the wondrous vision there;
And they called it "The Angel," divining his name.

For it came in silence and unaware,
It seemed no mortal hand had wrought
The uplifted face of prayerful thought;
But his features wasted beneath the sun,
Its life went out ere the day was done;
And the lad dreamed on.

And his dream was this: In the years to be
I will carve the Angel in lasting stone;
In another land, beyond the sea
I will toil in darkness, with dream alone;
While others sleep I will find a way
Up through the night to the light of day.

There's nothing desired beneath star or sun
Which patient genius has not won.
And the boy toiled on.

The years go by. He has wrought with might
He has gained renown in the land of art;
But the thought inspired that Christmas night
Still kept its place in the sculptor's heart;
And the dream of the boy, that melted away
In the light of the sun that winter day.

Is embodied at last in enduring stone,
Snow Angel in marble—his purpose won;
And the man toils on.

THE MILL MYSTERY.

CHAPTER IX.

AN UNEXPECTED DISCOVERY.

Ho'd, hold my heart!
And you, my sinews, grow not instant cold,
But bear me stiffly up!—

HAMLET.

Whether intentionally or unintentionally, I was saved the embarrassment of meeting Guy Pollard at the breakfast table the next morning. I was, therefore, left in ignorance as to the result of the conversation between the brothers, though from the softened manner of Dwight, and the quiet assurance with which he surrounded me with the delicate atmosphere of his homage, I could not but argue that he had come out master of the situation.

It was, therefore, with mingled feelings of pleasure and apprehension that I left the house at the hour appointed for the double funeral; feelings that would have been yet more alive had I realized that I should not re-enter those gates again, or see the interior of that fatal house, till I had passed through many bitter experiences.

The ceremonies, in spite of the latent suspicion of the community that Mr. Barrows' death had been one of his own seeking, were of the most touching and impressive description. I was overcome by them, and left the churchyard before the final prayer was said, feeling as if the life of the last three days had been a dream, and that here in the memory of my lovely Ada and her griefs lay my true existence and the beginning and ending of my most sacred duty.

Pursuant to this thought I did not turn immediately back to the gloomy mansion which claimed me for the present as its own, but wandered away in the opposite direction, soothing my conscience by the thought that it was many hours yet before the services would be held for Mrs. Pollard, and that neither the brothers nor Mrs. Harrington could have any use for me till that time.

The road I had taken was a secluded one, and strange as it may seem to some, did not awaken special memories in my mind till I came to a point where an opening in the trees gave to my view the vision of two tall chimneys; when, like a flash it came across me that I was on the mill road, and within a few short rods of the scene of Mr. Barrows' death.

The sensation that seized me at this discovery was of the strangest kind. I felt that I had been led there; and without a thought of what I was doing, pressed on with ever-increasing rapidity till I came to the open doorway with its dismantled entrance.

To pass over the now much-trodden grass and take my stand by the dismal walls was the work of an instant; but when I had done this and experienced in a rush the loneliness and ghostly influence of the place, I was fain to turn back and leave it to the dream of its own fearful memories. But the sight of a small piece of paper pinned or pasted on the board that had been nailed in futile precaution across the open doorway deterred me. It was doubtless nothing more important than a notice from the town authorities, or possibly from the proprietors of the place, but my curiosity was excited, and I desired to see it. So I hastened over to where it was, and with little apprehension of the shock that was destined to overwhelm me, read these words:

"Those who may Mr. Barrows committed suicide lie. He was murdered, and by parties whose position places them above exposure as their wealth and receiving prosperity robs them of even the appearance of motive for such a terrible deed."

No names were mentioned; but O God! And that word murdered. It swam before my eyes; it burned itself into every thing upon which I looked, it settled like a weight of iron upon my heart, pressing me nearer and nearer and nearer to the ground, till finally—Ah! can it be that this is really I, and that I am standing here in a desolate place alone, with no human being in sight, and with a paper in my hand that seemed larger and larger as I read, and yet, let me what I mean to do [illegible] whether in tearing it from the [illegible] where it hung. I asked myself to the accused, or by one stroke proclaimed myself the avenger which, if the words on this paper were true, I owed it to my Ada and the promise which I had given her to be? The cloud that enveloped my brain pressed upon me too closely for me to give an answer to questions so vital and terrific. I was in a maze,—a horrible dream; I could not think, I could only suffer, and at last creep away like a shadow of guiltiness to where a cluster of pine-trees made a sort of retreat in to which I felt I could thrust my almost maddened head and be lost.

For great shocks reveal deep secrets, and in the light of this pitiless accusation this fact had revealed itself without disguise to my eyes, that it was love I felt for Dwight Pollard; not admiration, not curiosity, not even the natural desire to understand one so seemingly impenetrable, but love, real, true, yearning, and despotic love, which if well founded might have made my bliss for a lifetime and which now——I thrust the paper between my lips to keep down the cry that rose there, and hiding my face deep down in the turf, mourned the weakness that made me so ready a victim, while at the same time I prepared to sustain the struggle which I knew must there and then be waged and decided if I was ever to face the world again with the strength and calmness which my nature demanded, and the extraordinary circumstances of my position imposed.

The result was an hour of misery, with a sensation of triumph at the end; though I do not pretend to say that in this one effort I overcame the admiration and interest which attached my thoughts to this man. The accusation was as yet too vague, and its source too doubtful, to blot his image with ineffaceable stains; but I did succeed in gaining sufficient mastery over myself to make it possible to review the situation and give what I meant should be an unbiased judgment as to the duty it imposed upon me.

The result was a determination to hold myself neutral till I had at least discovered the author of the lines I held in my hand. If they came from a credible person—but how could they do so and be written and posted up in the manner they were? An honest man does not seek any such roundabout way to strike his blow. Only a coward or a villain would take this method to arouse public curiosity, and perhaps create public suspicion.

And yet who could say that a coward and a villain might not be speaking the truth even in an accusation of this nature? The very fact that it met and gave form and substance to my own dim and unrecognized fears, proved that something as yet unknown and unsounded connected the mysterious death of Mr. Barrows with the family towards which this accusation evidently pointed. While my own heart beat with dread, how could I ignore the possibility of these words being the work of an accomplice disgusted with his crime, or of a tool anxious to save himself, and at the same time to avenge some fancied slight? I could not If peace and hope were lost in the effort I must learn the truth and satisfy myself, once and for all, as to whose hatred and fear the Pollard's were indebted for insinuations at once so tremendous and so veiled.

That I was the only person who had probably seen and read these fatal words, lent purpose to my resolution. If, as I madly hoped, they were but the expression of suspicion, rather than of knowledge, what a satisfaction it would be for me to discover the fact, and possibly unmask the cowardly author, before the public mind had been infected by his doubts.

But how could I, a woman and a stranger, with no other talisman than my will and patience, accomplish a purpose which would be, perhaps, no easy one for a trained detective to carry out to a successful issue? The characters in which the fatal insinuations had been conveyed offered no clue. They were printed, and in so rough and commonplace a manner that the keenest mind would have found itself baffled if it had attempted to trace its way to the writer through the mere medium of the lines he had transcribed. I must, therefore, choose some other means of attaining my end; but what one?

I had never, in spite of the many trials and embarrassments of my life, been what is called an intriguing woman. Nor had I ever amused myself with forming plots or devising plans for extricating imaginary characters out of fancied difficulties by the mere exercise of their gifts. Finesse was almost an unknown word to me, and yet, as I sat there with this fatal bit of paper in my hand, I felt that a power hitherto suppressed was awakening within me, and that if I could but restrain the emotions which threatened to dissipate my thoughts, I should yet hit upon a plan by which my design could be attained with satisfaction to myself and safety to others.

For—and this was my first idea—the paper had not been on the wall long. It was too fresh to have hung there overnight, and had, moreover, been too poorly secured to have withstood even for an hour the assaults of a wind as keen as that which had been blowing all the morning. It had, therefore, been put up a few moments before I came, or, in other words, while the funeral services were being held; a fact which, to my mind, argued a deep calculation on the part of the writer, for the hour was one to attract all wanderers to the other end of the town, while the following one would on the contrary, see this quarter over-flown with human beings, anxious to complete the impression made by the funeral services, by a visit to the scene of the tragedy.

The sky had clouded over very much in the last half-hour, and that the first drops of a heavy thunder shower were even now sifting through the branches over my head, was doubtless the reason why no one besides myself had yet arrived upon the scene; and should the storm continue, this evil might yet be averted, and the one person I was most anxious to see, have an opportunity to show himself at the place, without being confounded with a mass of disinterested people. For I felt he would return, and soon, to note the result of his daring action. In the crowd, if a crowd assembled, or alone if it so chanced that no one came to the spot, he would draw near the mill, and, if he found the notice gone, would be tray, must betray, an interest or an alarm that would reveal him to my watchful eye. For I intended to take up my stand within the doorway, using, if necessary, the storm as my excuse for desiring its shelter; while as a precaution against suspicions that might be dangerous to me, as well as a preventive against any one else ever reading these accusatory lines, I determined to dip the paper in the stream, and then drop it near the place where it had been tacked, that it might seem as if it had been beaten off by the rain, now happily falling faster and faster.

All this I did, not without some apprehension of being observed by a watchful eye. For what surety had I that the writer of these words was not even now in hiding, or had not been looking at me from some secret retreat at the very moment I tore the paper off the wall and fled with it into the bushes?

But this fear, if fear it was, was gradually dispelled as the moments sped by, and nothing beyond the wind and the fast driving rain penetrated to where I stood. Nor did it look as if any break in what seemed likely to become a somewhat dreadful monotony would ever occur. The fierce dash of the storm, was like a barrier, shutting me off from the rest of the world, and had my purpose been less serious, my will less nerved, I might have succumbed to the dreariness of the outlook and taken myself away while yet the gruesome influences that lay crouched in the darkness at my back remained in obeyance, and neither ghost's step nor man's step had come to shake the foundations of my courage and make my silent watch a struggle and a fear.

But an intent like mine was not to be relinquished at the first call of impatience or dread. Honor, love, and duty were at stake, and I held to my resolution, though each passing moment made it more difficult to maintain my hope as well as to sustain my composure.

At last—oh, why did that hollow of darkness behind me reverberate so continually in my fancy?—there seemed, there was, a movement in the bushes by the road, and a form crept gradually into sight that, when half seen, made the blood stop coursing through my veins; and, when fully in view, sent it in torrents to heart and brain; so deep, so vivid, so peculiar was the relief I felt. For—rather the effect upon me if you can—the figure that now stole towards me through the damp grass, looking and peering for the notice I had torn from the wall, was no other than my friend—or was it my enemy?—the idiot boy.

He was soaked with rain, but he seemed oblivious of the fact. For him the wind had evidently no fierceness, the wet no chill. All his energies—and he seemed, as in the first moment when I saw him in the summer house, to be alive with them—were concentrated in the gaze of his large eyes, as, coming nearer and nearer, he scrutinized the wall, then the ground, and finally with a leap, picked up the soaked and useless paper which I had dropped there.

His expression as he raised himself and looked fairly about almost made me reveal myself. This an idiot, this trembling, wrathful dumbsatory figure, with its rings of hair clinging to a forehead pale with passion and corrugated with thought! Were these gestures, sudden, determined, and full of subdued threatening, the offspring of an erratic brain or the expression of a fool's hatred? I could not believe it, and stood as if fashioned before this vision, that not only upset every past theory which my restless mind had been able to form of the character and motives of the secret Assassinator of the Pollard's, but awakened new thoughts and new inquiries of a nature which I vaguely felt to be as mysterious as any which had hitherto engaged my attention.

Meantime the boy had crushed the useless paper in his hand, and, flinging it aside, turned softly about as if to go. I had no wish to detain him. I wished to make inquiries first, and learn if possible all that was known of his history and circumstances before I committed myself to an interview. If he were an idiot—well, that would simplify matters much; but, if he were not, or, being one, had moments of reason, then a mystery appeared that would require all the ingenuity and tact of a Machiavelli to elucidate. The laugh which had risen from the shrubbery the night before, and the look which Dwight Pollard had given when he heard it, proved that a mystery did exist, and gave me strength to let the boy vanish from my sight with his secret unsolved and his purposes unguessed.

CHAPTER X.

RHODA COLWELL.

I spare your common curses.

—MRS. BROWNING.

IT was not long after this that the storm began to abate. Sunshine took the place of the clouds, and I was enabled to make my way back to the town at the risk of nothing worse than wet feet. I went at once to my boarding house. Though I was expected back at the Pollard's, though my presence seemed almost necessary there, I felt that it would be impossible for me to enter their door till something of the shadow that now enveloped their name had fallen away. I therefore sent them word that unlooked-for circumstances compelled me to remain at home for the present; and having thus dismissed one anxiety from mind, set myself to the task of gleaning what knowledge I could of the idiot boy.

The result was startling. He was, it seemed, a real idiot—or so had always been regarded by those who had known him from his birth. Not one of the ugly mischievous sort, but a gentle, chuckling vacant brained boy, who loved to run the streets and mingle his harmless laughter with the shouts of playing children and the noise of mills and manufactories.

He was an orphan, but was neither poor nor dependent, for—and here was where the fact came in that astonished me—he had for protector a twin sister whose wits were as acute as his were dull; a sister who through years of orphanage had cherished and supported him, working sometimes for that purpose in the factories; and sometimes simply with her needle at home. They lived in a nest of a cottage on the edge of the town, and had the sympathy of all though not perhaps the full liking of any. For Rhoda, the sister, was a being of an unique order, who, while arousing the interest of a few, baffled the comprehension of the many. She was a problem; a creature out of keeping with her belongings and the circumstances in which she was placed. An airy, lissom, subtle specimen of woman, whose very beauty was of an unknown order, causing as much inquiry as admiration. A perfect blonde like her brother, she had none of the sweetness and fragility that usually accompanies this complexion. On the contrary, there was something bizarre in her whole appearance, and especially in the peculiar expression of her eye, that awakened the strangest feelings and produced even in the minds of those who saw her engaged in the most ordinary occupations of life an impression of remoteness that almost amounted to the uncanny. The fact that she affected brilliant colors and clothed both herself and brother in garments of a well nigh fantastic make, added to this impression, and gave perhaps some excuse to those persons who regarded her as being as abnormally constituted as her brother, finding it impossible, I suppose, to reconcile waywardness with industry, and a taste for the rich and beautiful with a poverty so respectable, it scarcely made itself known for the reality it was. A blodde gipsy some called her, a dangerous woman some others; and the latter would undoubtedly have been correct had the girl possessed less pride of independence or been unhampered, as she was untrammelled, by the sense of responsibility towards her imbecile brother. As it was, more than one mother had reason to ask why her son wore such a moody brow after returning from a certain quarter of the town, and at one time gossip had not hesitated to declare that Dwight Pollard—the haughty Dwight Pollard—had not been ashamed to be seen entering her door, though every one knew that no one stepped under its wreath of vines except their intentions were as honorable as the beauty, if not the poverty, of its owner demanded.

When I heard this, and heard also that he visited her no more, I seemed to have gained some enlightenment as to the odd and contradictory actions of my famous idiot boy. He loved his sister, and was in some way imbued with a sense that she had been wronged. He was, therefore, jealous of any one who had, or seemed to have, gained the attention of the man who had possibly forsaken her. Yet even with this explanation of his conduct, there was much for which I could not account, making my intended interview with the sister a matter to be more or less apprehended.

It was therefore with a composure altogether outward and superficial that I started for the quaint and tiny cottage which had been pointed out to me as the abode of these remarkable twins. I reached it just as the clock struck three, and was immediately impressed, as my informants evidently expected me to be, by the air of poetry and refinement that characterized even its humble exterior. But it was not till I had knocked at the door and been ushered into the house by the idiot brother, that my real astonishment began. For though the room in which I found myself did not, as I was afterwards assured, contain a single rich article, it certainly had the effect of luxuriousness upon the eye; and had it not been for my inward agitation and suspense, would have produced a sense of languid pleasure, scarcely to be looked for in the abode of a simple working-girl. As it was, I was dimly conscious of a slight relief in the keen tension of my feelings, and turned with almost a sensation of hope to the boy who was smiling and grimacing beside me. But here another shock awaited me, for this boy was not the one I had seen at the mill barely two hours ago, or, rather, if it were the same—and the identity of his features, figure, and dress with those I knew so well, seemed to proclaim him to be—he was in such a different mood now as to appear like another being. Laughing, merry, and inane, he bore on his brow no sign nor suggestion of the fierce passion I had seen there, nor did his countenance change, though I looked at him steadily and long with a gaze that was any thing but in keeping with his seemingly innocent mirth.

"It is not the boy I have known," I suddenly decided in my mind; and I cannot say in what wild surmises I might have indulged, if at that moment the door at my back had not opened and a figure stepped in which at the first glance attracted my whole attention and absorbed all my thought.

Imagine a woman, lithe, blonde, beautiful, intense; with features regular as the carver's hand could make them, but informed with a spirit so venomous passionate, and perverse, that you lost sight of her beauty in your wonder at the formidable nature of the character she betrayed. Then see her dressed as no other woman ever dressed before, in a robe of scarlet of a cut and make quite its own, and conceive, if you can, the agitation I felt as I realized that in her I beheld my rival, my antagonist, the enemy of Dwight Pollard's peace and mine.

That her face, even the hatred that visibly contracted it as her eyes met mine, were familiar to me in the countenance and expression of the boy I had met, went for nothing. The beauty and malice of a seeming imbecile, and the same characteristics in a woman subtle and decided as this, awaken very different emotions in the mind. Though I had seen that same brow corrugated before, it was like a revelation to behold it now, and watch how the rosy lips took a straight line and the half shut, mysterious eyes burned like a thread of light, as she stretched out one white hand and asked half imperiously, half threateningly:

"Who are you, and for what do you come to me?"

"I am Constance Sterling," I retorted, satisfied that nothing short of the heroic treatment would avail with this woman: "and if I do not mistake, I think you know very well why I come here."

"Indeed!" came in something like a hiss from between her set lips. And in one short instant all that was best in her and all that was worst suddenly became visible, as turning to her softly chuckling brother, she motioned him gently out of the room, and then turning to me, advanced a step and said: "Will you explain yourself, Miss—or is it Mrs. Constance Sterling?"

"I will explain myself," I returned, wondering, as I saw her cheeks pale and her eyes emit strange and fitful sparks. if I exerted any such influence over her as she did over me. "I said I thought you know why I came here. I said this because this is not the first time we have met, nor am I the first one who has presumed to address the other in a tone that to a sensitive ear sounded like menace. The idiot boy——"

"We will leave my brother out of the discussion," she broke in, in a voice so distinct I scarcely noticed that it was nothing but a whisper.

"I am not alluding to your brother," I declared, meeting her eyes with a look steady as her own, and I hope more open.

"Oh, I see," she murmured, and she took another step, while the flash of her glance cut like a knife. "You accuse me then——"

"Of assuming a disguise to spy upon Dwight Pollard."

"It was a well-aimed shaft, and quivered alive and burning in her heart of hearts. She gave a spring like the panther she seemed at that minute, but instantly recovered herself, and launching upon me the strangest smile, mockingly exclaimed:

"You are a brave woman." Then as I did not quail before her passion, drew up her slight figure to its height and said: "We are worthy of each other, you and I. Tell me what you want."

ORANGEVILLE, DEC. 12, 1889.

AMONG THE ASPIRANTS.

The last seven days have brought no important change in the scramble for Orangeville's municipal offices. Mr. W. L. Walsh is the only who has announced himself as ready to battle for the proud position as mayor of Orangeville for 1890. Mr. Johnston Lindsay has not fully decided whether he will contest the mayoralty or the reeveship; and Mr. Joseph Foster will retire from public life at the end of the year.

Some of Dr. Henry's friends (?) are trying to induce him to accept the mayoralty again, but the Dr. has already filled the civic chair for three years, and he says he would not take the position for a thousand a year. Dr. Henry could have the office for the asking, and he should be good enough when he refuses to monopolize such an important seat.

Mr. H. Kelsall, we believe, is determined to contest the reeveship. Probably Messrs. J. Lindsay or G. B. Island may give him a race for that office.

So far, no person seems very anxious to attempt to dethrone Mr. Kearns, and he may be returned without opposition.

Messrs. Bailey and Cohoon the present representatives, are in the field for the South ward.

Mr. J. J. Kelly was mentioned as a candidate, but he told THE SUN he would not run for the council. Messrs. J. E. Booth, J. J. Kelly, J. H. Hughes will probably come out for school trustees.

In the North ward Messrs. Youmans and Rutchum will seek re-election. Messrs. F. Marshall and J. M. Bennett were asked to offer themselves as candidates. Both these gentlemen were interviewed by our reporter, and neither of them expressed their willingness to represent the ward. Mr. J. S. Leighton is the retiring school trustee for the ward.

Two new members will have to be chosen for the West, as Messrs Walsh and Lindsay are looking forward to higher positions. Messrs W. M. Green and H. Gillespie are aspiring to fill the soon vacant positions. Dr. Smith, per telephone, said he would not trouble himself with any municipal office this year. Dr. Lewis also informed us by telephone that he hadn't time to attend to municipal matters. "My business" said the Dr., "occupies more than all my time."

Two new trustees will be required for this ward.

The South ward is pretty quiet up to date. James May, one of its choice from time immemorial, would not tell us whether he intended to offer himself for the council, school board, or both. W. P. King and James Pinkney are in the field for the council, while Mr Jno. Binney may be looked upon as an aspirant for the school trusteeship.

Nominations for the above offices take place in the town hall at 7.30 P. M., on Monday, the 30th inst.

STRAW VS. TWINE.

Early last spring the Illinois State Grange, through its executive committee and seeking relief from the extortions of the twine trust, offered ten thousand dollars for a successful and practical machine to attach and bind grain with straw.

For the information of the general public the following report is submitted by the executive committee:

We received applications from persons residing in congress for the prize, from every State and Territory in the Union, also from Canada and Scotland. The committee met August 20, and for three days carefully looked over and minutely examined the models, drawings, and specifications then submitted by forty inventors, many of the models showing much thought and inventive genius. July 8 had been intended as a day of field trial of straw binders, under this offer, but at that time not a single machine was ready for field work, and only one working model of full size. However, as letters and applications continued to arrive daily, on this important invention, the August meeting was adjourned without action, and a final meeting was held October 29 and 30, when the committee decided that the full size model above mentioned filled the bill, under the offer, and accordingly tendered the ten thousand dollars. The inventor, however, declined to deed his straw-binding device to the State Grange for this amount of money, having had much larger offers for the machine and its patents. We have seen this machine bind grain, and it does the work much finer and better than can be done with straw bands by hand. It has an extra attachment for short straw or grain, that can be set in motion by the foot of the driver. The binder seems perfect in all its parts, more simple and easier to operate than the twine binder. The knotter is not as delicate in construction, yet does not take up more room, and is fast as the twine binder. We consider this a matter of great importance to all grain-raising farmers, for they will not hereafter be subject to the frauds and combines of the twine men, having plenty of binding material at hand on their farms.

DAIRYMEN'S CONVENTION.

The next annual convention of the Dairymen's Association of Western Ontario will be held in the city of London, on the 15th 16th and 17th of January, 1890. Among the associations distinguished visitors will be:

Hon. Chas. Drury, Provincial Minister of Agriculture.

Hon. W. D. Hoard, Governor of Wisconsin.

Mr. Thomas BaBastrne, M. P. P., Stratford.

Dr. McFarlane, Special Analyst, Ottawa.

Prof. Roberts, Cornell University, Ithaca.

Prof. J. W. Robertson, Agricultural College, Guelph, and others.

The reports of the inspectors for the past year will be submitted to the convention, together with other interesting matter in regard to new developments in the dairy interest during the year. This promises to be one of the most valuable meetings the association has ever held, and it is hoped the dairymen of the district, and all others interested in the care of this most important industry will make a special effort to be present. The list of speakers and specialists is certainly one of the most attractive ever presented to the public, and what the gentlemen named cannot tell about cheese and cheese-making cannot be learned from any other source.

The city council and council of the board of trade will, of course, take a special interest in the meeting, and show the hospitality of the city to the distinguished visitors.

THE circulation of copper cents in San Francisco is limited to about forty feet of the post office. They go in at the stamp window at the rate of $3 or $4 a day. They are carried from there to the money order department, where they are used for making change. They never get outside the Post-office door, but immediately find their way to the stamp window again.

SEALS IN THE ST. LAWRENCE.—On Thursday last a young seal weighing 80 pounds was slain in St. Mary's current near Montreal. Next morning a larger one, weighing 133 pounds, was shot between Longueuil Ferry and Mutton Island, and later in the day a third seal was seen near St. Helen's Island. The exceptionally large quantity of ice coming down from the Arctic regions and lodging in the Belle Straits this year, together with the very cool season west of the Straits in the St. Lawrence is thought to be the cause of the influx of a class of marine animals rarely, if ever, seen west of Quebec for many years.

A WAIF'S GOOD FORTUNE.—Richard Mullock, bright-eyed little Houlander, who for the last two months has been living at the Twelfth street Police Station in Chicago, cleaning cells and scrubbing floors, had probably, of all men in Chicago, the most reason to celebrate Thanksgiving. On that day he received from his mother in Rotterdam a letter informing him of the death of his grandfather, whose fortune, amounting to $120,000, had been left in equal portions to him and his elder brother William, living in Rotterdam. Sixteen months ago Richard Mullock, who was a private in the Dutch army, deserted and came to America. He will remain in Chicago.

BETTER LATE THAN NEVER.—Malton correspondence of date May 16th arrived at our office on Wednesday last Dec. 4. The envelope looked as though it had been in the pocket of Rip Van Winkle, it was so musty and yellow. It is rather late to publish events of last May, so we conclude to consign it to the waste basket.—Brampton Conservator.

FELL IN A FIT.—William Hall, formerly employed by Aikens Bros., as a tanner, fell in a fit at the C. P. R. depot Tuesday evening. In the fall he came in contact with the rails, badly cutting his face and knocking several teeth out. Dr. Henry was telephoned for and arrived on the spot in a few minutes. The injured man was conveyed to his home in the South ward.

OBSTRUCTING ROADS.—There is too much carelessness at the C. P. R. depot here, in trains standing across Hunter St. and obstructing public travel. It would be well if the authorities kept their eye on the business and hauled up a conductor now and again. The greater part of the obstruction is pure carelessness and not necessary that the traffic work may be efficiently done, and a dozen or two would soon prove this.—Cobourg Sentinel. Does this apply to Orangeville?

DEATH OF DAVID MCKINNON.—This community was very much surprised and grieved on the reception of a message on Sunday morning last to the effect that Mr. D. McKinnon had died at his home in Alton. He was well known and at one time was a member of the firm of F. C. Stewart & Co. of this town. Deceased was a man of rare ability, honest in his dealings, and industrious in his business pursuits. Although his death was not altogether unexpected, the shock proved a terrible blow to his wife and daughter, who have the heartfelt sympathy of everybody who knew the deceased. The funeral took place yesterday from his residence to the Erin cemetery and was largely attended. Peace to his ashes.

JEFF DAVIS IS NO MORE.

The ex-President of the Southern Confederacy Passes Away—A Notable Figure Passes Through Eternity.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 6.—Mr. J. E. Davis is dead.

Messages have been received from many points of sympathy for the dead and of sympathy for Mrs. Davis in her affliction.

WASHINGTON, D. C., Dec. 6.—The War Department up to noon had not been officially informed of the death of Jefferson Davis, and has taken no action in respect to it. A large painting of the deceased hangs on the wall of the chief clerk's room which is opposite and joins the office of the Secretary. It is surrounded by portraits of other ex-Secretaries. There was no crape about the portrait, and the flag over the building which has always been at half-mast on death of an ex-Secretary to day floats in a good breeze from its usual place at the top of the staff. Secretary Proctor was seen this morning and was asked what course the department would pursue in regard to Mr. Davis' death. He said:—"I see no occasion for any action whatever. It would serve no good purpose that I can see. 'Tis better to let the matter rest in oblivion; sleep it out will and to relegate it to the past, than to do anything that would revive memories best forgotten."

Several army officers in talking about the case, approved the Secretary's determination to ignore the matter, and said there really was no other course to take in view of the fact that the ex-chieftain of Jefferson Davis had never been restored.

RALEIGH, N. C., Dec. 6.—The announcement of the death of Jefferson Davis, was received here with profound sorrow. Bells are tolling and Mayor Thompson has called a meeting of citizens for to-night to pass resolutions.

[Jeff Davis was born in Kentucky on June 3, 1808. He graduated at West Point in 1828 and in 1833 retired from the army. In 1845 he entered Congress but resigned his seat to share in the glories of the Mexican campaign. He particularly distinguished himself at Buena Vista. In 1847 he was made a senator for Mississippi. He became Secretary of War under the Pierce Administration. When Mississippi seceded he resigned his seat, and in 1861 was made President of the Southern Confederacy. On the collapse of the rebellion he was captured at Irwinville, Ga., May 10, 1865, and imprisoned until May 13, 1867, when he was released on bail without trial.]

A FRIGHTFUL OUTRAGE.

MILLVILLE, N. J., Dec. 8.—The body of Mrs Annie Borden, colored, widow was found shockingly mutilated to her house here on Friday. The floor was covered with blood, and there was evidence of a terrible struggle. The woman was covered with blood from head to foot, and her clothing was torn almost wholly from her person. Medical examination revealed that the woman had been outrageously assaulted in a manner rarely recorded in medical or criminal annals. At the inquest the doctors testified that the murderer ripped open her abdomen with a knife, and committed an act equalling Jack the Ripper's work. A glass blower, John Knox, who was seen to hurriedly leave Mrs. Borden's house on Friday evening, and on whose hands and coat blood spots had been noticed, was arrested on suspicion. Two men testified that Knox had told them he had made away with a black woman who resisted his advances. Knox denies the charge against him, and explains the blood spots by saying he cut his hands with glass. He was committed without bail.

"Where the brook and river meet," is a period of "middle-hood" which is peculiar in the extreme to a vigorous, healthy woman, but Red Lion sequence, at certain times, when indeed irregularities, has wrecked many a fair young life. To all such with the strange pain of a stitch, desire for Pierce's Favorite Prescription is of inestimable value. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

HENRY E. SEARLE.

Henry Ernest Searle was born in the town of Grafton, Clarence River, New South Wales, on July 14th, 1868, his parents having emigrated in 1864 from Eastbourne, in Sussex, where his grandmother still resides, and was distinctly elected by her celebrated relative on his recent visit to England.

DEATH ON A FLAMING PIER.

Four Men Roasted to Death and Many Injured.

NEW YORK, Dec. 7.—The National Steamship Company's dock at pier 30, North River, took fire at half-past 1 o'clock this afternoon, and burned nearly to the water's edge. Four blackened dead bodies were taken from the ruins. Many more people were badly burned, some of whom are likely to die. It was the most disastrous fire on the river front for some time. For two hours the fire resisted the efforts of nearly two entire fire departments before Fourteenth street, and actually threatened two adjacent piers. The new ship Helmuth, belonging to the Netherland company, lay in her berth at the north side of the pier when the fire was discovered by quick work she was removed from her dangerous position and towed to the Jersey side. Exactly how the fire occurred is a mystery, but the officials of the company think that it was due to spontaneous combustion among a lot of cotton on the pier. The spread of the fire before it was discovered, and the confidence of the dock laborers that they could extinguish it without the aid of outside companies, gave the flames a tremendous headway. Before the men were really aware of their danger, the westerly end of the dock was a burning mass, and such of the laborers as escaped had to flee for their lives. It was then too late, of course, for the men who did not escape at that time were overpowered in the smoke, and fell senseless and dying in their tracks. Three alarms were turned in finally, and twelve tenders were summoned. After strenuous efforts on the part of the firemen the flames were subdued at half-past 4 o'clock, and the bodies of the victims were consigned to the morgue. The excitement of the crowd that surrounded the place had somewhat abated. One young woman, however, made several attempts to enter the ruins in search of her brother, Willie Berry. For hours she had been the attention of the spectators was directed to her frantic appeals to the policemen who were endeavoring to soothe her. Finally she was approached by a man who told her the boy was all right. She accepted his assurance with a look of relief and turned away. The complete list of those killed and injured is as follows:

KILLED.

James Barry, watchman, (a) years old.
Richard Johnson (colored), foreman, 45 years old, married.
George Decker (colored), longshoreman.
James Whalen, carpenter.

INJURED.

John Hopson (colored), married, longshoreman, badly burned; condition precarious.
Samuel Digger (colored), 70 years old, married, longshoreman, seriously burned.
Fred Williams, 40, carpenter, badly burned, but will recover.
Redmond Kipp, clerk, severely burned; will recover.
Gilbert Farmer (colored), 32, longshoreman, burned and cut; will recover.
John Hopking, 50, engineer, burned about face; will recover.
Robert Williams, 23, fireman, overcome by smoke; will recover.
John Thompson (colored), badly burned about the head, face and throat; condition precarious.
Frederick Williams, burned about the hands and face; will recover.
Robert Wallace, 33, foreman engine company, overcome by smoke; will recover.

Besides the above persons, who were taken to St. Vincent's Hospital, there were half a dozen who were slightly burned about the hands and face. Among these were several firemen. There is only one person unaccounted for out of the 250 employed on the pier—the elevator boy, James McGuire. It is thought, however, that he got out all right and went to his home. The loss cannot be definitely ascertained, but it is thought will exceed $250,000, which is fully covered by insurance.

The C.P.R. Atlantic Outlet.

PORTLAND, Me., Dec. 9.—The Press says it has information from undoubted authority that Portland will be the outlet for business of the Canadian Pacific railway. The Boston & Maine Railroad Company will erect an immense elevator on their wharf in this city to accommodate the increased business. It is said the Beaver Line of steamships will be the first to take the Canadian Pacific grain from the new elevator. The latter is to be ready by next winter.

BOSTON, Dec. 7.—Manager Furber, of the Boston & Maine Railway, declares there is no foundation for the report that Portland, Me., is to be an outlet for the Canadian Pacific Railway, and that Mr. Furber is to build an elevator there.

"Standing, with reluctant feet is a type of thousands of young girls who are emerging from the childhood stage of their existence, as they enter upon their "teens." Nervous, excitable, irritable, afraid of a stranger, unknowable forces within, they, each a mystery unto herself, our girls need the tendered care, the most loving, patient oversight, and the aid of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, to safely carry them through this critical period, during which, in too many lives, alas, are sown the seeds of disastrous forms of disease peculiar to the female sex. But this boon to womanhood will prevent all such diseases, or cure them if they have already seized a victim. Woman owes it to herself, to her family, and to her social station, to be well and strong. Let her then not neglect the sure means of cure, "Favorite Prescription" is a legitimate medicine, carefully compounded by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to women's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in its effects in any condition of the system. Sold by druggists; $1.00, or six bottles for $5.00.

A MAIDEN'S PSALM OF LIFE.

Tell me not, in idle jingle,
"Marriage is an empty dream!"
For the girl is dead that's single,
And things are not what they seem.

Life is real! life is earnest!
Single blessedness is a lib;
"Man thou art, to man returnest,"
Has been spoken of the "rib."

Not enjoyment, and not sorrow,
Is our destined end or way,
But to act, that each to-morrow
Finds us nearer marriage-day.

Life is long, and youth is fleeting,
And our hearts as stout and strong,
Just like girls drums are beating
Wedding marches all day long.

In the world's broad field of battle,
In the bivouac of life,
Be not like dumb, driven cattle!
Be a heroine—a wife.

Trust no future, howe'er pleasant,
Let the dead past bury its dead!
Act—act in the living present!
Love within and hope ahead.

Lives of married folk remind us
We can live your lives as well,
And, departing, leave behind us
Such examples as shall "tell"—

Such examples, that's another,
Wasting time in idle sport,
A forlorn, unmarried brother,
Seeing, shall take heart and court,

Let us, then, be up and doing,
With a heart of triumph set;
Still contriving, still pursuing,
And each one a husband get.

LOST LIGHT.

I cannot make her smile come back—
That sunshine of her face
That used to make this worn earth seem,
At times, so gay a place.
The same dear eyes look out at me;
The features are the same;
But, oh! the smile is out of them,
And I must be to blame.

Sometimes I see it still; I went
With her the other day,
To meet a long-missed friend, and while
We still were on the way,
Her confidence in waiting love
Brought back, for me to see,
That old-time love-light to her eyes
That will not shine for me.

They tell me money waits for me;
They say I might have fame;
I like those gewgaws quite as well
As others like those same.
But I care not for what I have,
Nor just for what I lack
One lithe as much as my heart longs
To call that lost light back.

Come back! dear banished smile, come back!
And into exile drive
All thoughts, and aims, and jealous hopes
That to thy stead would thrive.
Who wants the earth without its sun?
And what has life for me,
What's worth a thought, if, as its price,
It leaves me robbed of thee!

HOSPITAL REMEDIES WILL GIVE YOU HEALTH!

A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE

The four greatest medical centres of the world—London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards studying under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practise here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the sick the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although the retail cost from $20 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the usual patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure everything from a single bottle. The result always fuel for a reliable class of domestic remedies to now filled with perfect satisfaction. The Hospital Remedies make no pretension of a cure-all. The specific for CATARRH cures that and nothing else; so with the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLES; RHEUMATISM is cured by No. 3, while troubles of DIGESTION, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their own cure. So these do not claim to be a specific for FEVER and AGUE, one for FEMALE WEAKNESS—a BENEFICIAL TONIC and BLOOD-MAKER that each and GIVES FORM AND FULNESS, and an incomparable remedy for NERVOUS DEBILITY.

NO. 1—COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION—An incomparable remedy; does not merely stop a cough, but eradicates the disease and strengthens the lungs and constitution against relapse. $1.00.

NO. 2—RHEUMATISM AND GOUT—Acknowledged and unquestionably the most celebrated remedy in the world. Has built his reputation on this remedy. $1.00.

NO. 3—LIVER AND KIDNEYS, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, CONSTIPATION and BILIOUS DISEASE—A favorite stomachic tonic for the invalid who has tried more disease than cures. Then consider. Use a remedy manufactured in high places. $1.00.

NO. 4—FEVER AND AGUE, DUMB AGUE, MALARIA, NEURALGIA—Has never failed, never disappointed, never disappointed. It is unequaled to break it for a time. Use a remedy that accomplishes it. $1.

NO. 5—FEMALE WEAKNESS, IRREGULARITIES, WHITES—Many women are broken down, hopeless, despairing. Many diseases until already and undone. Use No. 5 and regain health and strength. $1.00.

NO. 6—HEALTH, FORM AND FULNESS—Restored on grief lined and lack of it. If young, it tones it young, if old young, use this perfect tonic. $1.00.

NO. 7—NERVOUS DEBILITY, LOSS OF POWER—A potent nerve-vitalizer, pick and bell a peerless remedy for those unfortunate conditions. No. 8 is golden, which are lost and gone. Some of the important results which emerge high prices for cheap and worthless imitations. Beware of imitations. Use No. 8 and 7 and regain the properties of which they are entirely ignorant, and who expose you by selling your confidential letters to others in the same unfortunate condition. Use No. 8 and 7 then again. $1.00.

Too sturdy oak whose branches wide
Boldly the storms and winds defy,
Not long ago an acorn, small,
Lay dormant beneath the summer sky.

Not unlike the thrifty oak in its germ, development and growth, is consumption. But even this mighty foe of mankind, positively yields to the wonderful curative properties of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery if taken early. Don't be blind to your own interests and think yours a hopeless case. This remarkable remedy has rescued thousands. It is the only medicine of its class, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee that it will benefit or cure in all cases of disease for which it is recommended, or money paid for it promptly refunded.

Poetry.

WOODS IN WINTER.

When winter winds are piercing chill,
And through the hawthorn blows the gale,
With solemn foot I tread the hill
That overlooks the lonely vale.

O'er the bare upland, and away
Through the long reach of desert woods,
The gnarled oak sends its shattered prey,
And groaning shake their solitudes.

Where, twisted round the barren oak,
The summer vine in beauty clung,
And summer winds the stillness broke,
The crystal icicle is hung.

Where, from their frozen urns, mute springs
Pour out the river's gradual tide,
Shrill the shrill wind sweeps
And icicles fill the woodland side,

And winds were soft, and woods were green,
And the song ceased not with the day.

But still wild music is abroad,
Pale, desert woods within your chords
And gathering winds, in hoarse accord,
Amid the vocal reeds pipe loud.

Chill airs and wintry winds! my ear
Has grown familiar with your song;
I hear it in the opening year—
I listen, and it cheers me along.

The Story Teller.

THE MILL MYSTERY.

CHAPTER X.

RHODA COLWELL.

THEN I felt my own cheek turn pale, and I was fain to sit upon the pile of cushions that were arranged in one corner for a seat.

"What I want," I repeated. "I want to know you dared put in language the insinuations which you hung up on the door of the old mill this morning?"

Her eyes narrowed, as I have said, in her seemingly habitual desire to keep their secrets to herself, flashed wide open at this, while a low and mirthless laugh escaped her lips.

"So my labor was not entirely wasted," she cried. "You saw———"

"Both the lines and the writer," I completed, relentlessly perserving the advantage I felt myself to have gained—"the lines before they were defaced by the storm, the writer as she picked up the useless paper and went away."

"So!" she commented, with another echo of that joyless laughter; "there are two spies instead of one in this game!"

"There are two women instead of one who know your enemity and purpose," I retorted.

"How came you at the mill?" she suddenly asked, after a moment of silent communication with her own repressed soul.

"By accident," was all my reply.

"Were you alone?"

"I was."

"Then no one but yourself saw the paper?"

"No one but myself."

She gave me a look I made no sign of understanding.

"Have you told any one of what you saw and read?" she inquired at last, as she perceived I meant to volunteer nothing.

"That I am not called upon to state," I returned.

"Oh, you would play the lawyer!" was her icy and quiet remark.

"I would play nothing," was the answer that came from my lips.

She drew back and a change passed over her.

Slowly as a fire kindled, the passion grew and grew on her face. When it was at its height she leaned her two hands on a table that stood between us, and, bending forward, whispered:

"Do you love him? Are you going to fight to keep his name free from stain and his position unassailed before the world?"

Believe me if you can, but I could not answer; possibly because I had as yet no answer to the question in my soul.

She took advantage of my hesitation.

"Perhaps you think it is not worth while to fight me; that I have no real weapons at my command?" and her eyes shot forth a flame that devoured my rising hopes and seared my heart as with a fiery steel.

"I think you are a cruel woman," I declared, anxious to destroy what no longer gives you pleasure."

"You know my story then?" she whispered. "He has talked about me to you?"

"No," I replied, in quiet disdain. "I know nothing save what your own eyes and your own conduct tell me."

"Then you shall," she murmured, after a moment's scrutiny of my face. "You shall hear how I have been loved, and how I have been forsaken. Perhaps it will help you to appreciate the man who is likely to wreck both our lives."

I must have lifted my head at this, for she paused, and gave me a curious look.

"You don't love him?" she cried.

"I shall not let him wreck my life," I responded.

Her lip curled and her two hands closed violently at her sides.

"You have not known him long," she declared. "You have not seen him at your feet, or heard his voice, as day by day he pleaded with such sweet persuasive tones, your soul, as mine, to his mercy! You have not known his touch!"

"No," I impatiently cried, frustrated by her phrase and tone.

I thought she looked relieved, and realized that her words might have been as much an inquiry as an assertion.

"Then do not boast," she said.

The blood that was in my cheeks went out of them. I felt my eyes close spasmodically, and hurriedly turned away my head. She watched me coldly.

"Do you think I succumbed without a struggle?" she vehemently asked, after a moment or two of this silent torture. "Look at me. Am I a woman to listen to the passionate avowals of the first man that happens to glance my way and imagine he would like to have me for his wife? In a handsome face and honeyed tongue sufficient to gain my good graces, even when it is backed by the world, I love and the position to which I feel myself equal? I tell you you do not know Rhoda Colwell, if you think she could be won easily. Days and days he haunted this room before I let his words creep much beyond my ears. I had a brother who needed all my care and all my affection, and I did not mean to marry, much less to love. But slowly and by degrees he got a hold on my heart, and then, like the wretch who trusts himself to a maelstrom, I was swept round and round into the whirlpool of passion till not earth or heaven could save me or make me again the free and light-hearted girl I was. This was two years ago, and to day———"

She stopped, choked. I had never seen greater passion, as I had never seen a more fiery nature.

"It is his persistency I complain of," she murmured at last. "He forced me to love him. Had he left me when I first said 'No,' I could have looked down on his face to-day with contempt. But no, he had a fancy that I was his destiny, and that he must possess me or die. Die? He would not let me die when I found that my long sought 'Yes' turned his worship into indifference, and his passion into constraint. But—" she suddenly cried, with a repetition of that laugh which now sounded so fearful in my ears—"all this does not answer your question as to how I dared publish the insinuations I tacked up on the old mill door this morning."

"No," I shudderingly cried.

"Ah! I have waited long," she passionately asserted. "Wrongs like mine are very patient, and are very still, but the time comes at last when even a woman weak and frail as I am can lift her hand in power; and when she does lift it———"

"Hush!" I exclaimed, bounding from my seat and seizing her upraised arm; for her vivid figure seemed to emit a flame like death. "Hush! we want no tirades, you nor I; only let me hear what Dwight Pollard has done, and whether you know what you were saying when you called him and his family———"

"Murderers!" she completed.

I shook, but bowed my head. She loosed her arm from my grasp and stood for one moment contemplating me.

"You are a powerful rival," she murmured. "He will love you just six months longer than he did me."

I summed up at once my pride and composure.

"And that would just be six months too long," I averred, "If he is what you declare him to be."

"What?" came from between her set teeth, and she gave a spring that brought her close to my side. "You would hate him, if I proved to you that he and his brother and his mother were the planners if not the executors, of Mr. Barrows' death."

"Hate him?" I repeated, recoiling, all my womanhood up in arms before the fearful joy expressed in her voice and attitude. "I should try and forget such a man ever existed. But I shall not be easily convinced," I continued, as I saw her lips open with a sort of hope terrible to witness. "You are too anxious to kill my love."

"Oh, you will not be convinced," she asserted. "Ask Dwight Pollard what sort of garments those are which lie under the boards of the old mill, and see if he can answer you without trembling."

"Garments?" I repeated, in astonishment; "garments?"

"Yes," said she. "If he can bear you ask that question and not turn pale, stop me in my mad assertions, and fear his doom no more. But if he flinches———"

A frightful smile closed up the gap, and she seemed by a look to motion me towards the door.

"But is that all you are going to tell me?" I queried, dismayed at the prospect of our interview terminating thus.

"Is it not enough?" she asked. "When you have seen Alice, I will see you again. Can you not wait for that hour?"

I might have answered No. I was tempted to do so, as I had been tempted more than once to exert the full force of my spirit and crush her. But I had an indomitable pride of my own, and did not wish to risk even the semblance of defeat. So I controlled myself, and meekly replied:

"Do not detain me longer. Dwight Pollard exists. I am not intending to return to his house."

"And you, you will see him," she avowed. "I can easily be rattled out of them." And she cast another look of disdain towards the door.

"You are a demon!" I felt tempted to respond, but my own dignity restrained me as well as her beauty, which was something absolutely daunting in its intensity and fire. "I will have the truth from you yet," was what I did say, as I moved, heart-sick and despairing, from her side.

And her slow "No doubt," seemed to fill up the silence like a knell, and give to my homeward journey a terror and a pang which proved that however I had deceived myself, hope had not given up its secret hold upon my heart.

And I dreamed of her that night, and in my dream her evil beauty shone so triumphantly that my greatest wonder was not that Dwight Pollard had succumbed to her fascination, but that having once seen the glint of that subtle soul shine from between those half shut lids, he could ever have found strength to turn aside and let the fire he had roused burn itself away.

CHAPTER XI.

UNDER THE MILL FLOOR!

I know, this act shows terrible and grim.
—OTHELLO.

I had never considered myself a courageous person. I was therefore surprised at my own temerity when, with morning light, came an impulse to revisit the old mill, and by an examination of its flooring, satisfy myself as to whither it held in hiding any such articles as had been alluded to by Rhoda Colwell in the remarkable interview just cited. Not that I intended to put any such question to Dwight Pollard as she had suggested, or, indeed, had any such intentions at all beyond the present. The outlook was too vague, my own mind too troubled, for me to concoct plans or to make any elaborate determinations. I could only perform the duty of the moment, and this visit seemed to me to be a duty, though not one of the pleasantest or even of the most promising character.

I had therefore risen and was preparing myself in an abstracted way for breakfast, when I was violently interrupted by a resounding knock at the door. Alarmed, I scarcely knew why, I hastened to open it, and fell back in a very visable astonishment when I beheld standing before me no less a person than Anice, the late Mrs. Pollard's maid.

"I wanted to see you, miss," she said, coming in without an invitation, and carefully closing the door behind her. "So, as I had leave to attend early mass this morning, I just slipped over here, which, if it is a liberty, I hope you will pardon, seeing it is for your own good."

Not much encouraged by this preamble I motioned her to take a seat, and then, turning my back to her, went on arranging my hair.

"I cannot imagine what errand you have with me, Anice," said I; "but if it is anything important, let me hear it at once, as I have an engagement this morning, and am in haste."

A smile, which I could plainly see in the mirror before which I stood, passed shyly over her face. She took up her parasol from her lap, then laid it down again, and altogether showed considerable embarrassment. But it did not last long, and in another moment she was saying, in quite a bold way:

"You took my place beside the mistress I loved, but I don't bear you no grudge, miss. On the contrary, I would do you a good turn; for what are we here for, miss, if it's not to help one another?"

As I had no answer for this worthy sentiment, she lapsed again into her former embarrassed state and as speedily recovered from it. Simpering in a manner that unconsciously put me on my guard, she remarked:

"You left us very suddenly yesterday Miss. Of course that is your own business, and I have nothing to say against it. But I thought if you knew what might be gained by staying———she paused and gave me a look that was almost an appeal.

But I would not help her out.

"Why," she went on desperately, with a backward toss of the head, "you might think as how we was not such very bad folks after all. I am sure you would make a very nice mistress to work for Miss Starling," she simpered; "and if you would just let me help you with you your hair as I did old Mrs. Pollard———"

Angry, mortified, and ashamed of myself that I had listened to her so far, I turned on her with a look that seemed to make some impression even upon her.

"How dare you———" I began, then paused, shocked at my own imprudence in thus betraying the depth of the feelings she had aroused. "I beg your pardon," I immediately added, recovering my composure by a determined effort; "you doubtless did not consider that you are not in a position to speak such words to me. Even if your instructions meant anything serious, which I will not believe, our acquaintance———I am afraid I threw some sarcasm into that word———has scarcely been long enough to warrant you in approaching me on any subject of a personal nature, least of all the subject of a personal nature, least of all the manner in which I dress my hair. If you have nothing better to say, you may go."

She rose with a jerk that caused all my eyes to dwell in expectation of the opportunity to escape, and took a reluctant step towards the door.

"I am sure I meant no offence, miss," she stammered, and took another step still more reluctantly than before.

I trembled. Outrageous as it may seem, I wished at this moment that honor and dignity would allow me to call her back and question her as to the motive and meaning of her extraordinary conduct. For the thought had suddenly struck me that she might be a messenger—a most unworthy and humiliating one it is true,—and yet in some sort of a way a messenger, and my curiosity rose just in proportion as my pride rebelled.

Anice, who was not lacking in wit, evidently felt, if she could not see, the struggle she had awakened in my mind, for she returned, and gave me a look I no longer had the courage to resent.

"It is only something I overheard Mr. Guy say to his brother," she faltered opening and shutting her parasol with a nervous hand; then, as I let my hair suddenly fall from my grasp, in the rush of relief I felt, blurted out: "You have beautiful hair, miss; I don't won for Mr. Guy should say, "One of us two must marry that girl," and was gone like a flash from the room, leaving me in a state that bordered on stupefaction.

This incident, so suggestive, and, alas! so degrading to my self esteem, produced a deep and painful effect on my mind. For hours I could not rid my ears of that final sentence: "One of us two must marry that girl." Nor could the events that speedily followed quite remove my mind and heart the sting which this knowledge of the Pollards' base calculation and diplomacy had implanted. It had one favorable consequence, however. It nerved me to carry out the expedition I had planned, and gave to my somewhat failing purpose a heart of steel.

The old mill to which I have twice carried you, and to which I must carry you again, was, as I have already said, a dilapidated and much dismantled structure. Though its walls were intact many of its staircases were rotten, while its flooring was, as I knew, heavily broken away in spots, making it a dangerous task to walk about its passage-ways, or even to enter the large and solitary rooms which once shook to the whirr and hum of machinery.

But it was not from such dangers as these I recoiled. If Heaven would not protect me from discovery and the possible intrusion of unwelcome visitants, I would willingly face the peril of a fall even in a place so lonesome and remote. Indeed, my one source of gratitude as I sped through the streets that morning lay in the fact, I was so little known in S———, I could pass and re-pass without awakening too much comment, especially when I wore a close veil, as I did on this occasion.

Rhoda Colwell's house lay in my way. I took especial pains not to go by it great as the relief would have been to know she was at home and not wandering the streets in the garb and character of the idiot boy. Though I felt I could not be deceived as to her identity, the mere thought of meeting her, with that mock smile of imbecility upon her lip, filled me with a dismay that made my walk anything but agreeable. It was consequently a positive relief when the entrance to the mill broke upon my view and I found myself at my journey's end unwatched and unfollowed; nor could the unpromising nature of my task quite dash the spirit with which I began my search.

My first efforts were in a room which had undoubtedly been used as an office. But upon inspecting the floor I found it firm, and, convinced I should have to go further for what I was seeking, I hastily passed into the next room. This was of much larger dimensions, and here I paused longer, for more than one board tilted as I passed over it, and not a few of them were loose and could be shifted aside by a little extra exertion of strength. But, though I investigated every board that rocked under my step, I discovered nothing beneath them but the dust and debris of years, and so was forced to leave this room as I had the other, without gaining anything beyond a sense of hopelessness and the prospect of a weary back. And so on and on I went for an hour, and was beginning to realize the giant nature of my undertaking, when a sudden low sound of running water broke upon my ears, and going to one of the many windows that opened before me I looked out and found I was in the very back of the mill, and in full sight of the dark and sullen stream that in times of yore used to feed the great wheel and run the machinery. Consequently I was in the last room upon the ground floor, and what struck me still more forcibly, near, if not directly over, that huge vat in the cellar which had served so fatal a purpose only a few short days before.

The sight of a flight of stairs descending at my right into the hollow darkness beneath intensified my emotion. I seemed to be in direct communication with that scene of death, and the thought struck me that here, if anywhere in the whole building, must be found the mysterious hiding place for which I was in search.

I directed my glances along the uneven flooring, and I was instantly surprised when, after a short examination of the various loose boards that rattled beneath me, I discovered one that could be shifted without difficulty. But scarcely had I succeeded in raising it when an emotion of fear seized me, and I started back alert and listening, though I was unconscious of having heard anything more than the ordinary wash of the water beneath the windows and the beating of my own overtaxed heart. An instant's hearkening gave me the reassurance I needed, and convinced that I had startled myself unnecessarily, I knelt again over the board and this time succeeded in moving it aside. A long, black garment, smoothly spread out to its full extent, instantly met my eye. The words of Rhoda Colwell were true; the mill did contain certain articles of clothing concealed within it.

I do not know what I expected when, a few minutes later, I pulled the garment out of the hole in which it lay buried, and spread it out before me. Not what I discovered, I am sure; for when I had given it a glance, and found it was nothing more or less than a domino, such as is worn by masqueraders, I experienced a shock that the mask, which fell out of its folds, scarcely served to allay. It was like the introduction of farce into a terrible tragedy; and as I stood in a maze and surveyed the garment before me till its black outline swam before my eyes, I remember thinking of the effect which had been produced, at a certain trial I had heard of, by the prisoner suddenly bursting into a laugh when the sentence of death was pronounced. But presently this feeling of incongruity gave way to one of hideous dread: If Dwight Pollard could explain the presence of a domino and mask in this spot, then what sort of a man was Dwight Pollard, and what sort of a crime could it have been that needed for its perpetration such adjuncts as these? The highwaymen of olden time, with their "Stand and deliver!" seemed out of place in this quiet New England town; nor was the character of any of the parties involved, of a nature to make the association of this masquerade gear with the tragedy gone by seem either possible or even probable. And yet, there they lay; and not all my wonder, nor all the speculations which their presence evoked, would serve to blot them from the floor or explain the mystery of which they were the sign and seal.

So impressed was I at last by this thought that I broke the spell which bound me, and began to restore the articles to their place. I was just engaged in throwing the mask into the hole, when the low but unmistakable sound of an approaching foot fall broke upon my ears, startling me more than a thunder clap would have done, and filling me with a fear that almost paralyzed my movements. I controlled myself, however, and hastily pulled the board back to its place, after which I frantically looked about me for a place of concealment or escape. I found but one. The staircase which ran down to the cellar was but a few feet off, and if I could summon courage to make use of it, would lead to a place of comparative safety. But the darkness of that spot seemed worse than the lightness of this, and I stood hesitating on the brink of the staircase till the footsteps drew so near I dared not linger longer, and plunged below with such desperate haste, I wonder I did not trip and fall headlong to the cellar floor. I did not, however, nor do I seem to have made any special noise, for the footsteps above did not hasten. I had, therefore, the satisfaction of feeling myself saved from what might have been a very special danger, and was moving slowly away, when the fascination which all horrible objects exert upon the human soul seized me with a power I could not resist, and I turned slowly but irresistibly towards the corner where I knew the vat to be.

One glimpse and I would have fled; but just at that instant I turned I heard a sound overhead that sent the current of my thoughts in a fresh direction, and lent to my failing courage a renewed strength which made flight at that moment seem nothing more or less than an impulse of cowardice. This was nothing more nor less than a faint creaking, such as had followed my own lifting of the board which hid the domino and mask; a noise that was speedily followed by one yet more distinct and of a nature to convince me beyond a doubt that my own action was being repeated by some unknown hand. Whose? Curiosity, love, honor, every impulse of my being impelled me to find out. I moved like a spirit towards the stairs. I placed my foot on one step, and then another mounting in silence and without a fear, so intent was I upon the discovery which now absorbed me. But just as I reached the top, just when another movement would lift my head above the level of the floor, I paused, realizing as in a flash what the consequence might be if the intruder should prove to another than Rhoda Colwell, and should keep not his back but his face turned towards

IN THE MUNICIPAL FIELD.

As time rolls on and nomination day draws nearer, the candidates for the different civic offices are beginning to pose up.

It is almost a certainty that Mr. W. L. Walsh will be elected mayor by acclamation. And the same may be said of Messrs. J. Lindsay and J. Kearns, who are in the field for the position of reeve and deputy reeve respectively. We honestly believe that three better men than the above candidates could hardly be chosen. They have served the town faithfully this year, and are entitled to be returned without opposition.

However, eleven more days will solve the problem.

No new aspirants have appeared in the North ward, and it is a foregone conclusion that Messrs. Youmans and Ketchum will be relected by acclamation. Mr. J. C. Fox wishes us to state that he will not be a candidate this year. Mr. J. S. Leighton it is believed, will be returned as school trustee.

There will undoubtedly be a contest in the South ward. Messrs. W. P. King, J. J. Hubbard, and Jas. May will go to the polls. Mr. Jas. Pinkney has not, as yet, made up his mind whether he will run or not. Mr. King will silently sail in, and Messrs. Hubbard and May will have a desperate struggle for supremacy. The odds, however, are slightly in favor of the former. Mr. May has occupied a seat at the green table too long for his and the town's good, and, as somebody suggests, "new blood is wanted." Mr. Robt. Mann is seriously thinking of offering himself as a candidate for the school trusteeship.

The East ward is very quiet up to date. Mr. Wm. Fleming would make a first class representative, but he will not accept the office. Messrs. Bailey and Cobean are after re election, and the general opinion is they will be returned without opposition. J. J. Kelly, J. E. Booth and J. H. Hughes are out for school trustees.

---

In the West ward Messrs. Marshall Green and H. Gillespie have already announced themselves as candidates for the council. They are both young men who have grown up with the town, and would, we are sure, give a creditable account of themselves if placed as representatives of the ward. Mr. J. R. Dodds and Wm. Cruikshanks have announced their intention of battling for a place at the school board.

GLADSTONE AND THE EIGHT HOUR LAW.

Gladstone declines to accept the invitation to initiate an agitation looking to the establishment of a working day of eight hours. He says his time must be devoted to the settlement of the Irish question and for this reason as well as on account of the infirmities of age he must abstain from taking a leading part in the movement. He promises to dispassionately consider the subject when the proposed eight hour bill is presented to parliament. Lord Randolph Churchill in his letter on the eight hour movement, says eight hours of labor, eight hours of sleep and eight hours of recreation seems to be the ideal at which democratic legislation may wisely and profitably aim. A working day of eight hours would diminish the number of unemployed, and it would also lessen the profits of the capitalists. If the latter result were a disadvantage it would be largely outweighed by the increased comfort and content of the laborers.

MEREDITH AT LONDON

London, Ont., Dec. 16.—Mr. W. R. Meredith met fully 1,800 of his constituents of the Forest City to-night. The gathering was in the Grand Opera House, the capacity of which is about the same as that of its namesake in Toronto. A London political audience is proverbially punctual and well behaved. Both of these traits they exhibited to a degree this evening. No political man was ever given a more orderly hearing. There was not so much as a jar or a noise in any part of the house, either away up in "the gods" or in the chairs. The night was beastly as to the weather and a drizzling rain fell incessantly. This, however, did not prevent Mr. Meredith's friends gathering in the numbers that they did.

THE QUESTIONS OF THE DAY DISCUSSED.

Mr. Meredith spoke for nearly two and a half hours, and he entered extensively into the questions of the day, notably the liquor license abuses, the Crown lands, timber and mining policy of the Government, its bureaucratic and centralizing greed, the politicalizing of the Education Department, the alleged vote by ballot under which the Provincial elections are held, the Separate Schools and the French question.

Mr. Meredith devoted over an hour to discussing Separate Schools, and he was frequently and loudly applauded as he proceeded, and he wound up his address amid a regular ovation, the audience nearly raising the roof off the theatre with their cheers. Mr. Meredith was quite eloquent at times, far more so than ever he was known to be in the Assembly. Being on his native heath it is quite natural that the leader of the Opposition should put in all the oratorical touches at his command.

Besides this was the first appearance of Mr. Meredith on a public platform since the close of the Local House in April, and his utterances were looked forward to with intense interest, not only here in London, but throughout the province.

Mr. Meredith started in by telling his audience that for seventeen years he had represented them in the Ontario Legislature, and during all that time he had received at their hands naught but the warmest and kindest consideration, which, he assured them, he never would forget till his dying day. He also remarked on the fact that there had been a great deal of adverse criticism in certain quarters because he had not seen fit to declare himself sure now on public matters, but he never once referred or hinted at the recent attempt of the Hamilton Spectator to assassinate him as a party leader because of his alleged weak-kneedness or lack of bold front.

ON THE THUMB SCREW.

Mr. Meredith next attacked the "infamous administration of the Liquor License Act" by partisan inspectors and commissioners and the centralizing grants of the Government generally. He laughed at Mr. Mowat's statements in the House that patronage is a weakness to any Government. The Premier had truly shown that it was a source of great power to himself. The building, the issuers of marriage licenses, liquor commissioners, inspectors and even the Education Department itself had been violently seized for party purposes and patronage.

LIQUOR LICENSES.

He stated the policy of the Opposition to be, in respect of liquor licenses, that they should not be under control of either political party. No interest or trade, even the liquor trade, should be at the mercy of a political party. The licenses should be administered by non-partisan bodies in the various localities.

Why should not the county councils be entrusted with the appointment of the inspectors and the people of the districts with the election of the commissioners direct? This would certainly be more in the interest of temperance and honesty.

ROSS REWARDED.

The prostitution of the Education Department for political purposes was next referred to. Ontario's education system had no superior on earth until the Government of the day laid violent hands upon it for party purposes. A great wrong was done the people when the department was taken from the hands of a non-partisan administrator like the late Dr. Ryerson and placed in the hands of a minister of the Crown. Dr. Ryerson, back in 1868, pointed out what the dangers of such a transaction would be, and his utterances have proved prophetic, as is seen at present.

He was also strongly in favor of having the election of Separate School trustees by ballot. This latter statement Mr. Meredith made after having taken his seat. He stated that he had omitted it in his general remarks.

Mr. Meredith next put himself on record as the opponent of exemptions from taxation generally, save in respect of the slight exemptions that working men now enjoy on their incomes. There was much, he said, that the Government could do in enquiring into industrial and social problems instead of its everlasting contests with the central Government on provincial rights' facts. The Factory Act and other measures of interest to workingmen would stand some investigation.

MR. MEREDITH GETS WARMED UP.

Then Mr. Meredith branched off into what he described as the vexed questions of the day. What country in the world, he asked, gives any greater privileges to its Roman Catholic citizens than this great Province of Ontario? There was no office in it that was not open to a Roman Catholic, in theory at least, and still when he had attempted to discuss questions which concerned Catholics, he was met with the everlasting down with the no popery cry and the thunderbolts of a powerful church were turned against him. This was done in the last general elections. (Applause).

Across the border, in the great land of freedom, there was not a single Separate School from one end of it to the other. The people of the United States had thought it right to deny their fellow Catholic citizens the use of separate schools. But in Ontario they were guaranteed under the great charter by which we were governed. He considered that it was a great mistake when Separate Schools were established, and he would not go a jot further in opening the door for their further extension. (Applause.)

AGAINST SEPARATE SCHOOL EXTENSION.

"I will not," exclaimed Mr. Meredith, advocate the abolition of the Separate schools, as that would be impossible, for they are guaranteed under the charter, but I certainly will strongly oppose opening the door of their extension any wider. I would be open to a charge of treason if I did so. (Applause.)

There he went on to the matter of the bishops and priests of the Roman Catholic Church interfering with the selection of Separate School trustees, and instanced the fight that she late Archbishop Lynch made for the election of Mr. Anglin on the anti-ballot ticket. The late prelate had contended the faithful that as the election of a school trustee was a religious affair, every one of the flock would be called upon to answer to God for his vote.

"Obey your prelates," was the command of the hierarchy, "and vote for their slaves of men." If this were sound, continued Mr. Meredith, why the necessity of holding an election at all? Wagenhal say the hierarchy imposed that requirement save the form of holding an election?

"Our fellow Catholic citizens," continued the speaker, "complain that they do not get their share of offices. That may be not a fair one I cannot protest against in the overbearing religious cry. What business is religion to do with an office? The State should know no man's religion, that is a matter for his God and his conscience; the question is, is he a good man? Is he fit for the position?

"I protest against the whole religious cry business. You can't go to heaven on it. The golden house beyond the skies has no doubt, often been reached by ways that are not pointed by any priest or prophet." (Prolonged applause.)

AN EFFICIENT REPRESENTATION.

I have now given you my views upon some of the important questions of the day. I am ready to stand by these principles and I am ready to fall by them. I appeal to you to say whether these principles are founded upon truth and justice. If you have ordered to carry on our system of government according to these principles we must unitedly stand by them.

While I repeat that I have no desire to stir up religious or race strife, still I must say this it would be the height of unwise cowardice that a man would not stand up and declare his views upon the great questions now before this country. It is easy to shut one's eye to the evils of the body politic, but the day will come when these questions will have to be met and dealt, and if you do not do it now you will hereafter have to do it under different circumstances. (Cheers.)

It is of no consequence to me whether I am elected to Parliament or not. I appreciate the honor that you confer upon me. I have given the best years of my life to my country and have endeavored to discharge my public duties honestly and conscientiously in the interests of this province. I can say here that I have had, and still have, but one honest light—God and my country and my fatherland. (Cheers.)

Death of Rev. Dr. Williams.

Toronto, Dec. 17.—The death of Rev. Dr. John A. Williams, which was very long expected, took place early this morning. He was conscious all afternoon, and in the early part of the evening he fell asleep, from which he passed to his eternal reward, without any symptoms of pain. ## AIDING THE LAND LEAGUERS.

$130,000 Cabled to the Irish Fund This Morning.

Detroit, Mich., Dec. 16.—Rev. Dr. Really, treasurer of the Irish National Land League, to-day cabled $150,000 to Dr. Kenny, treasurer of the Irish League, for the use of the Tenants' Defence Fund. Dr. Really, in an interview, said: "The need of funds for the league was never more urgent. The Irish people are entering upon the last stage of their agitation, and a desperate struggle is going on between the tenants and landlords of Ireland. The landlords recognize that their tenure is doomed. I shall be sorely disappointed if the Irish in America and their sympathizers, desert the tenants in this hard and most heroic of their efforts to extricate themselves from the cursed system that has for ages been sucking the blood out of their veins and weighing upon their spirits. Remittances will be made as fast as money is received and there are already some signs that the League in America is taking to this work."

A Heavy Loss of Jewellery.

Lisbon, Dec. 16.—The ex-Empress of Brazil has received a telegram from Rio Janeiro informing her that all her jewels have been stolen and that the police are investigating the case. If the republic should decline to continue Dom Pedro's income the loss of this treasure will be severely felt, as they were looked upon as the chief immediate resource of the family.

Farewell to a Teacher.—On Thursday afternoon last, the pupils of the high school presented Mr. Bonis, assistant teacher, with an address and a complete volume of Shakspeare's works. Mr. Bonis, who has severed his connection with the school to take a more lucrative position, made a very suitable reply.

Accused of Fraud.—A young man named J. A. Campbell, residing in Mono, was arrested by Constable Hubbard on Monday and brought to Orangeville. The young man purchased a threshing machine from W. E. Hall, and used it this summer. He neglected to pay for it and legal proceedings were instituted. The case came up before P. M. Pattullo Tuesday, and matters were satisfactorily arranged.

The I. O. F. Concert.—The concert given under the auspices of the I. O. F. in the town hall on Tuesday evening was a first-class entertainment. The disagreeable state of the weather kept many from attending, but, as it was, the hall was two-thirds full. The local talent did well, Messrs. James Wilson and J. Hilliard Cameron received hearty applause. The latter proved himself to be the funniest man in Canada.

Asphyxiated.—Joseph Gordon, of Elora, and his young wife, retired t'other night after filling the coal stove and shutting off the drafts.—Fortunately the young husband awoke, had a trifle of energy left, and taking in the situation dragged his wife from the bed and to the door, otherwise he would have been a widower almost before he knew the pleasures of being a benedict. Wedding Bells.—A very pleasing event took place at the residence of F. C. Stewart, M. P. P., First avenue, yesterday. The occasion was the marriage of his daughter, Brownie, to Mr. F. H. Thompson, barrister, of Mitchell. Rev. A. Henderson, rector of St. Mark's church, tied the silken knot. The bride was attended by Miss Alice Thompson, (Guelph) and Miss Olive A. Stewart, while Mr. Wm. Thompson (Winnipeg) and Master Tod Lewis acted in a similar capacity for the groom. The happy couple left for New York by the evening train. The Sun wishes them every prosperity.

Searching for Whiskey.—On Thursday last Inland Revenue Officer Graham, of Owen Sound, arrived in town and set out to search for illicit whiskey. Somebody informed the inspector that J. E. Henderson, an umbrella repairer who resides on Broadway, was manufacturing whiskey on the sly. Mr. Graham and Chief Shields proceeded to Henderson's house and searched in vain for the contrabrand article. Not the least indication of a still or anything pertaining thereto was found on the premises. Chief Shields received a one dollar Wm. for his services. This is a case where the practical joker came out first.

HEARING THE END.

Their last Regular Meeting—A new wood By-law—Other Business—Rates, Etc.

The second last meeting of the town council for the year 1889 was held in the council chamber last Monday night. Some of the aldermen were a little late in getting around, but business commenced with a full board shortly after 7.30.

The clerk opened the ball by reading last meeting's minutes, which were adopted.

ACCOUNTS

were read by the mayor. They were from A. Turner, 90c.; Advertiser, $3; Geo. Harkins, $2.50; Hillhouse & Young, $6.98; Post, $1.50; A. G. McKenzy, $2.50; A. & W. Johnson, $3.95; E. Durst, $4.50; John Winstock, $9.90; Jas. Patterson, $18; R. Ferguson, $1, ordered to be paid. Wm. Harding, $3.53, for shovelling snow, referred.

The mayor read a communication from Capt. King, regarding the payment of the firemen's salaries. The amount required was $255, and a motion ordering the payment thereof was carried.

Hugh Haley complained of the high assessment of some of his property. He said one of his houses was assessed for $400 and he would sell it for $300. The Assessment committee will see if there is any room for speculation.

Mrs. Smith, whose restaurant was consumed by fire some time ago, asked for a refund of taxes. This matter was also referred to the Assessment committee.

H. Bonis, B. A., president of the High School Literary Society, asked for a refund of hall rent. Reeve Foster opposed the motion to refund, but Mr. Lindsay explained matters and a refund was ordered.

REPORTS.

Mr Kearns read the report of the Printing committee, which recommended the payment of an account. Adopted.

Mayor-elect Walsh read the Assessment committee's report, which was adopted. No action will be taken in the matter of refunding Mr. Shannon's taxes. The gentleman is a superannuated minister, and the statutes are not quite clear on such exemptions.

Mr. Youmans brought in the Charity report. Twenty four dollars and sixteen cents was what the charity account amounted to last month leaving a balance on hand of thirty-nine cents.

Mr. King gave a verbal report of the R. & B. committee, and asked that $36 be placed to its credit. This brought Reeve-elect Lindsey to his feet. He objected to "the principle of the thing," and Mr. K. will have to bring in a full report. Mr. Foster said Mr. King took all the responsibility of the work of several committees on himself. He said Mr. K. never consulted him when the town cemetery was being repaired. Mr. King replied to the reeve, and caused a laugh when he said: "I went and consulted Mr. Foster when the cemetery was being repaired, and the reeve said "the cemetery could go to the d——l."

Mr. Lindsey said the financial statement would be ready in a few days, and he wanted to know if the council intended to have them printed the same as last year. The Finance committee will deliberate on that question.

KETCHUM'S WOOD BY LAW.

A few minutes before the council adjourned, Mr. Ketchum said he would introduce a by law at the next meeting of the council to regulate the wood-selling industry. He intends to have an inspector on the market, and every load must be correctly measured and classed. A by-law that will successfully govern that question will be a great boon to the citizens.

Two hundred and twenty-five dollars was ordered to be paid Electric Light Contractor McDonald on account.

The members and the press representatives then dispersed.

GRAND VALLEY.

The Presbyterian Sabbath school will hold a "Christmas tree" his evening.

SHELBURNE.

The Salvation Army had a 'time' here last week.

Geo. W. Bowers, general merchant, Honeywood, has got himself into trouble. A short time ago he made an assignment to Mr. Wm. McCutcheon, of Shelburne. It appears that previous to making the assignment over $1000 worth of goods was removed from the store to the house of a neighbor. The creditors became suspicious, discovered Bowers' little game and he is now keeping out of the way of the Toronto detective who holds a warrant for his arrest. The affair has created quite a sensation.

An elderly man who has been a guest at the Royal Hotel for several days is very absent minded. It is vouched for as a fact that he went into dinner the other day, and, after coming out and sitting round for a while, entered the dining room again and partook of a second dinner, having forgotten that he had eaten his mid-day meal only a short time before. It seems he has been in the habit of paying for meals as he took them, and only became aware of his mistake when informed of it by the landlord upon tendering payment the second time. We have heard and read of absent-minded men, but we think this fellow beats the record.

Sam Falloon, of Amaranth, has been having a good time in Melancthon in the vicinity of Hornings Mills and Redickville. He was collecting money for an imaginary widow named Moore, who had been burnt out, as he stated, near Corbetton. Sam raped in a good many quarters, which will never see the widow Moore (?) He secured a night's lodging at Mr. Noble's, near Redickville, on representing that he was a cousin of Reeve Jelly, of Shelburne. He also informed Mr. Noble that he had purchased the Mammoth Skeleton from Mr. John Jelly for $10 50 and offered Mr. Noble a free passage to Liverpool and back if he would go with him on his starring tour with the greatest show on earth. It is stated that some of the gulled parties intend having a warrant issued for Samuel's arrest for obtaining money under false pretences.

COLD IN HEAD CATARRH — THE 4 STAGES. — CONSUMPTION DEATH.

There is positive danger to health and life in neglecting a case of Cold in the Head or Catarrh, and at this season with its changeable weather, unusual moisture and sudden changes from heat to cold, there is peculiar liability to cold in the head. A neglected case of Cold in the Head rapidly developes into Catarrh, and neglected Catarrh not uncommonly developes into Consumption and leads to premature death. Medical testimony proves conclusively that a large percentage of all the deaths occurring from Consumption had their origin in a neglected Cold, which, by gradual stages, developed into Catarrh, then into Consumption, that dread disease with which medical science is powerless to cope successfully. If you are suffering from Cold in the head, or from any of the symptoms of Catarrh, such as foul breath, dull oppressive headaches, droppings from the head into the throat, hawking and spitting, copious discharges from the nostrils, loss of sense of smell, or taste becoming dull, hacking cough, or a general feeling of debility, husky voice, wheezing or croaking sound in your chest when breathing, a feeling of dizziness, particularly when stooping, a feeling of tiredness and indisposition to exertion, a feeling of nausea in the morning when attempting to dislodge accumulations in the throat. Do not neglect them. These are but a few of the many symptoms of Catarrh, and if you experience any, BE WARNED IN TIME. Do not permit them to run under the mistaken impression that the disease will eventually wear away. It will not, but on the contrary will wear you away as it has thousands before. Procure at once a bottle of NASAL BALM, the only certain and speedy cure ever offered to the public for Cold in the Head and Catarrh. This is no idle assertion, but an unquestionable fact, which is verified by thousands of testimonials in our possession telling of marvellous cures. These testimonials we have received from all parts of the Dominion, and we append a few, selected at random, as a fair sample of the whole:—

Mr. Alex. Burns, of Sudbury, Ont., says:—Gents, I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh for seven or eight years, and it was attended with consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears, and sickening pain in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of NASAL BALM are sweet breath, stoppage of the dropping into the throat (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the "Balm" will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

James H. McLeod, Mink River Road, N. S., says:—I have tried other remedies for Catarrh, but received little or no good from them. Your NASAL BALM is certainly the BEST REMEDY I have tried, and all you claim for it. The fact that it is pleasant and convenient to use adds greatly to its value, but its chief worth lies in being a CERTAIN CURE for that unpleasant disease—Catarrh.

Wm. Chas. Hunter, postmaster, Spry Bay, N. S., says:—I submit the following to the public that any who may be afflicted may be benefited by the same remedy. Two bottles of your NASAL BALM has RESTORED to PERFECT HEALTH a four year old child of ours, suffering from Catarrh.

Henrietta Blackwell Parker, Ont., says:—Your NASAL BALM is the BEST REMEDY I have yet used for Catarrh. I can breathe more freely than before and my breath has regained its sweetness. I consider NASAL BALM a boon to the suffering.

A CAUTION:—Beware of imitations. Put your dollar into no other NASAL BALM in stock do not let him palm off some worthless imitation on you. If any druggist should try to make you take any other remedy which he may say is just as good, but good druggists do not do such things, insist on having what you call for. The undersigned will send one bottle of NASAL BALM and a Nasal Douche, with full directions for its successful treatment, on receipt of price—50 cents and $1.00 per bottle.

IN THE MUNICIPAL FIELD.

As time rolls on and nomination day draws nearer, the candidates for the different civic offices are beginning to loom up.

It is almost a certainty that Mr. W. L. Walsh will be elected mayor by acclamation. And the same may be said of Messrs. J. Lindsay and J. Kearns, who are in the field for the position of reeve and deputy reeve respectively. We honestly believe that three better men than the above candidates could hardly be chosen. They have served the town faithfully this year, and are entitled to be returned without opposition.

However, eleven more days will solve the problem.

No new aspirants have appeared in the North ward, and it is a foregone conclusion that Messrs. Youmans and Ketchum will be relected by acclamation. Mr. J. C. Fox wishes us to state that he will not be a candidate this year. Mr. J. S. Leighton, it is believed, will be returned as school trustee.

There will undoubtedly be a contest in the South ward. Messrs. W. P. King, J. J. Hubbard, and Jas. May will go to the polls. Mr. Jas Pinkney has not, as yet, made up his mind whether he will run or not. Mr. King will silently sail in, and Messrs. Hubbard and May will have a desperate struggle for supremacy. The odds, however, are slightly in favor of the former. Mr. May has occupied a seat at the green table too long for his and the town's good, and, as somebody suggests, "new blood is wanted." Mr. Robt. Mann is seriously thinking of offering himself as a candidate for the school trusteeship.

The East ward is very quiet up to date. Mr. Wm. Fleming would make a first class representative, but he will not accept the office. Messrs. Bailey and Cubean are after re election, and the general opinion is they will be returned without opposition. J. J. Kelly, J. E. Pouth and J. H. Hughes are out for school trustees.

In the West ward Messrs. Marshall Green and H. Gillespie have already announced themselves as candidates for the council. They are both young men who have grown up with the town, and would, we are sure, give a creditable account of themselves if placed as representatives of the ward. Mr J. R. Dodds and Wm. Cruikshanks have announced their intention of battling for a place at the school board.

GLADSTONE AND THE EIGHT HOUR LAW.

Gladstone declines to accept the legislation to initiate an agitation looking to the establishment of a working day of eight hours. He says his time must be devoted to the settlement of the Irish question and for this reason as well as on account of the infirmities of age he must abstain from taking a leading part in the movement. He promises to dispassionately consider the subject when the proposed eight hour bill is presented to parliament. Lord Randolph Churchill in his letter on the eight hour movement says eight hours of labor, eight hours of sleep and eight hours of recreation seems to be the ideal at which democratic legislation may wisely and profitably aim. A working day of eight hours would diminish the number of unemployed, and it would also lessen the profits of the capitalists. If the latter result were a disadvantage it would be largely outweighed by the increased comfort and content of the laborers.

Cardinal Celestin Gang Bauer, archbishop of Vienna, died Saturday.

MEREDITH AT LONDON

LONDON, Ont., Dec. 16.—Mr. W. R. Meredith met fully 1,800 of his constituents of the Forest City to-night. The gathering was in the Grand Opera House, the capacity of which is about the same as that of its namesake in Toronto. A London political audience is proverbially punctual and well behaved. Both of these traits they exhibited to a degree this evening. No political man was ever given a more orderly hearing. There was not so much as a jar or a noise in any part of the house, either away up in "the gods" or in the chairs. The night was beastly as to the weather and a drizzling rain fell incessantly. This, however, did not prevent Mr. Meredith's friends gathering in the numbers that they did.

THE QUESTIONS OF THE DAY DISCUSSED.

Mr. Meredith spoke for nearly two and a half hours, and he entered extensively into the questions of the day, notably the liquor license abuses, the Crown lands, timber and mining policy of the Government, its bureaucratic and centralizing greed, the political zing of the Education Department, the alleged vote by ballot under which the Provincial elections are held, the Separate Schools and the French question.

Mr. Meredith devoted over an hour to discussing Separate Schools, and he was frequently and heartily applauded as he proceeded, and he wound up his address amid a regular ovation, the audience nearly raising the roof off the theatre with their cheers. Mr. Meredith was quite eloquent at times, far more so than ever he was known to be in the Assembly. Being on his native heath it was quite natural that the leader of the Opposition should put in all the oratorical touches at his command.

Besides this was the first appearance of Mr. Meredith on a public platform since the close of the Local House in April, and his utterances were looked forward to with intense interest, not only here in London, but throughout the province.

Mr. Meredith started in by telling his audience that for seventeen years he had represented them in the Ontario Legislature, and during all that time he had received at their hands naught but the warmest and kindest consideration, which, he assured them, he never would forget till his dying day. He also remarked on the fact that there had been a great deal of adverse criticism in certain quarters because he had not seen fit to declare himself one way on public matters, but he never once referred or hinted at the recent attempt of the Hamilton Spectator to assassinate him as a party leader because of his alleged weak-kneedness or lack of bold front.

ON THE THUMB SCREW.

Mr. Meredith next attacked the "infamous administration of the Liquor License Act" by partisan inspectors and commissioners and the centralizing grants of the Government generally. He laughed at Mr. Mowat's statements in the House that patronage is a weakness to any Government. The Premier had truly shown that it was a source of great power to himself. The bailiffs, the issuers of marriage licenses, liquor commissioners, inspectors and even the Education Department itself had been violently seized for party purposes and patronage.

LIQUOR LICENSES.

He stated the policy of the Opposition to be, in respect of liquor licenses, that they should not be under control of either political party. No interest or trade, even the liquor trade, should be at the mercy of a political party. The licenses should be administered by non-partisan bodies in the various localities.

Why should not the county councils be entrusted with the appointment of the inspectors and the people of the districts with the election of the commissioners direct? This would certainly be more in the interest of temperance and honesty.

ROSS REBUKED.

The prostitution of the Education Department for political purposes was next referred to. Ontario's education system had no superior on earth until the Government of the day laid violent hands upon it for party purposes. A great wrong was done the people when the department was taken from the hands of a non-partisan administrator like the late Dr. Ryerson and placed in the hands of a minister of the Crown. Dr. Ryerson, back in 1868, pointed out what the dangers of such a transaction would be, and his utterances have proved prophetic, as is seen at present.

He was also strongly in favor of having the election of Separate School trustees by ballot. This latter statement Mr. Meredith made after having taken his seat. He stated that he had omitted it in his general remarks.

Mr. Meredith next put himself on record as the opponent of exemptions from taxation generally, save in respect of the slight exemptions that working men now enjoy on their incomes. There was much, he said, that the Government could do in acquiring into industrial and social problems instead of its everlasting contests with the central Government on provincial rights' facts. The Factory Act and other measures of interest to workingmen could stand some investigation.

MR. MEREDITH GETS WARMED UP.

Then Mr. Meredith branched off into what he described as the vexed questions of the day. What country in the world, he asked, gives any greater privileges to its Roman Catholic citizens than this great Province of Ontario? There was no office in it that was not open to a Roman Catholic, in theory at least, and still when he had attempted to discuss questions which concerned Catholics, he was met with the everlasting, down with the no popery cry and the thunderbolts of a powerful church were turned against him. This was done in the last general elections. (Applause).

Across the border, in the great land of freedom, there was not a single Separate School from one end of it to the other. The people of the United States had thought it right to deny their fellow Catholic citizens the use of separate schools. But in Ontario they were guaranteed under the great charter by which we were governed. He contended that it was a great mistake when Separate Schools were established, and he would not go a lot further in opening the door for their further extension. (Applause.)

AGAINST SEPARATE SCHOOL EXTENSION.

"I will not," exclaimed Mr. Meredith, advocate the abolition of the Separate Schools, as that would be impossible, for they are guaranteed under the charter, but I certainly will strongly oppose opening the door of their extension any wider. I would be open to a charge of treason if I did so. (Applause.)

This he went on to the matter of the bishops and priests of the Roman Catholic Church interfering with the selection of Separate School trustees, and instanced the fight that the late Archbishop Lynch made for the election of Mr. Anglin on the ballot ticket. The late prelate had contended the faithful that as the election of a school trustee was a religious affair, every one of the them would be called upon to answer to God for his vote.

"Obey your prelates," was the command of the hierarchy, "and vote for their choice of men." If this were sound, continued Mr. Meredith, why the necessity of holding an election at all? Why should not the clergy appoint the trustees? Why should we have the bother of holding an election?

"Our fellow Catholic citizens," continued the speaker, "complain that they do not get their share of offices. That may be so; but what I earnestly protest against is the overbearing religious cry. What has a man's religion to do with an office? The State should honor no man's religion, that is a matter for his God and his conscience. I will ask, is, 'Is he a good man?' Is he fit for the position?

"I protest against the whole religious cry business. You can't go to heaven on it. The golden dome beyond the skies has, no doubt, often been pointed by wars that were not pointed by either priest or prophet." (Prolonged applause.)

AT SLIGHT PERSONAL.

I have now given you my views upon most of the important questions of the day. I am ready to stand by those principles and I am ready to fall by them. I appeal to you to say whether those principles are founded upon truth and justice. If we have a desire to carry on our system of government according to those principles we must unitedly stand by them.

While I repeat that I have no desire to stir up religious or race strife, still I must say that it would be the delight of craven cowardice that a man would not stand up and declare his views upon the great questions now before this country. It is easy to shut one's eye to the evils of the body politic, but the day will come when these questions will have to be met and cleared, and if you do not do it now you will hereafter have to do it under different circumstances. (Cheers.)

It is of no consequence to me whether I am elected to Parliament or not. I appreciate the honor that you confer upon me. I have given the best years of my life to my country and have endeavored to discharge my public duties honestly and conscientiously in the interests of this province. I can say here that I have had, and still have, but one beacon light—God and my country and my fatherland. (Cheers.)

Blake opposed the appeal. His Lordship reserved judgment.

AIDING THE LAND LEAGUERS.

$130,000 Cabled to the Irish Fund This Morning.

DETROIT, Mich., Dec. 16.—Rev. Dr. Really, treasurer of the Irish National Land League, to-day cabled $155,000 to Dr. Kenny, treasurer of the Irish League, for the use of the Tenants' Defence Fund. Dr. Really, in an interview, said: "The need of funds for the league was never more urgent. The Irish people are entering upon the last stage of their agitation, and a desperate struggle is going on between the tenants and landlords of Ireland. The landlords recognize that their tenure is doomed. I shall be sorely disappointed if the Irish in America and their sympathizers, desert the tenants in this last and most heroic of their efforts to extricate themselves from the cursed system that has for ages been sucking the blood out of their veins and weighing upon their spirits. Remittances will be made as fast as money is received and there are already some signs that the League in America is taking to this work."

A Heavy Loss of Jewellery.

LISBON, Dec. 16.—The ex-Empress of Brazil has received a telegram from Rio Janeiro informing her that all her jewels have been stolen and that the police are investigating the case. The loss will be a heavy blow to the Imperial family. The jewels comprised the finest Brazilian diamonds in the world. If the republic should decline to continue Dom Pedro's income the loss of the treasure will be severely felt, as they were looked upon as the chief immediate resource of the family.

FAREWELL TO A TEACHER.—On Thursday afternoon last, the pupils of the high school presented Mr. Bonis, assistant teacher, with an address and a complete volume of Shakspeare's works. Mr. Bonis, who has severed his connection with the school to take a more lucrative position, made a very suitable reply.

ACCUSED OF FRAUD.—A young man named J. A. Campbell, residing in Mono, was arrested by Constable Hubbard on Monday and brought to Orangeville. The young man purchased a threshing machine from W. E. Hall, and used it this summer. He neglected to pay for it and legal proceedings were instituted. The case came up before P. M. Pattullo Tuesday, and matters were satisfactorily arranged.

THE I. O. F. CONCERT.—The concert given under the auspices of the I. O. F. in the town hall on Tuesday evening was a first-class entertainment. The disagreeable state of the weather kept many from attending, but, as it was, the hall was two-thirds full. The local talent did well, Messrs. James Wilson and J. Hilliard Cameron received hearty applause. The latter proved himself to be the funniest man in Canada.

ASPHYXIATED.—Joseph Gordon, of Elora, and his young wife, retired t'other night after filling the coal stove and shutting off the drafts.—Fortunately the young husband awoke, had a trifle of energy left, and taking in the situation dragged his wife from the bed and to the door, otherwise he would have been a widower almost before he knew the pleasures of being a benedict. ST. MARK'S CHURCH ANNIVERSARY.—The St. Mark's church Sabbath school will hold their annual festival in the town hall on Friday Dec. 27th. WEDDING BELLS.—A very pleasing event took place at the residence of F. C. Stewart, M. P. P., First avenue, yesterday. The occasion was the marriage of his daughter, Brownie, to Mr. F. H. Thompson, barrister, of Mitchell. Rev. A. Henderson, rector of St. Mark's church, tied the silken knot. The bride was attended by Miss Alice Thompson, (Guelph) and Miss Olive A. Stewart, while Mr. Wm. Thompson (Winnipeg) and Master Tod Lewis acted in a similar capacity for the groom. The happy couple left for New York by the evening train. THE SUN wishes them every prosperity.

SEARCHING FOR WHISKEY.—On Thursday last Inland Revenue Officer Graham, of Owen Sound, arrived in town and set out to search for illicit whiskey. Somebody informed the inspector that J. E. Henderson, an umbrella repairer who resides on Broadway, was manufacturing whiskey on the sly. Mr. Graham and Chief Shields proceeded to Henderson's house and searched in vain for the contrabrand article. Not the least indication of a still or anything pertaining thereto was found on the premises. Chief Shields received a one dollar W. on for his services. This is a case where the practical joker came out first.

NEARING THE END.

Their Last Regular Meeting—A new wood By-law—Other Business—Rates, Etc.

The second last meeting of the town council for the year 1889 was held in the council chamber last Monday night. Some of the aldermen were a little late in getting around, but business commenced with a full board shortly after 7.30.

The clerk read the minutes of the last meeting's minutes, which were adopted.

ACCOUNTS.

Were read by the mayor. They were from A. Turner, 90c.; Advertiser, $3; Geo. Harkins, $2.50; Hillsburg & Young, $6.95; Post, $1.50; A. G. McKenzy, $2.50; A. & W. Johnson, $3.93; E. Darst, $4.50; John Whitelock, $9.90; Jas. Patterson, $18; R. Ferguson, $1, ordered to be paid. Wm. Harding, $3.53, for shovelling snow, referred.

The mayor read a communication from Capt. King, regarding the payment of the firemen's salaries. The amount required was $255, and a motion ordering the payment thereof was carried.

Hugh Haley complained of the high assessment of some of his property. He said one of his houses was assessed for $400 and he would sell it for $300. The Assessment committee will see if there is any room for speculation.

Mrs. Smith, whose restaurant was consumed by fire some time ago, asked for a refund of taxes. This matter was also referred to the Assessment committee.

H. Bonis, B. A., president of the High School Literary Society, asked for a refund of hall rent. Reeve Foster opposed the motion to refund, but Mr. Lindsay explained matters and a refund was ordered.

REPORTS.

Mr Kearns read the report of the Printing committee, which recommended the payment of an account. Adopted.

Mayor-elect Walsh read the Assessment committee's report, which was adopted. No action will be taken in the matter of refunding Mr. Shannon's taxes. The gentleman is a superannuated minister, and the statutes are not quite clear on such exemptions.

Mr. Youmans brought in the Charity report. Twenty four dollars and sixteen cents was what the charity account amounted to last month leaving a balance on hand of thirty-nine cents.

Mr. King gave a verbal report of the R. & B. committee, and asked that $36 be placed to its credit. This brought Reeve-elect Lindsay to his feet. He objected to "the principle of the thing," and Mr. K. will have to bring in a full report. Mr. Foster said Mr. King took all the responsibility of the work of several committees on himself. He said Mr. K. never consulted him when the town cemetery was being repaired. Mr. King replied to the reeve, and caused a laugh when he said: "I went and consulted Mr. Foster when the cemetery was being repaired, and the reeve said 'the cemetery could go to the d——l.'"

Mr. Lindsay said the financial statement would be ready in a few days, and he wanted to know if the council intended to have them printed the same as last year. The Finance committee will deliberate on that question.

KETCHUM'S WOOD BY LAW.

A few minutes before the council adjourned, Mr. Ketchum said he would introduce a by law at the next meeting of the council to regulate the wood-selling industry. He intends to have an inspector on the market, and every load must be correctly measured and classed. A by-law that will successfully govern that question will be a great boon to the citizens.

Two hundred and twenty-five dollars was ordered to be paid Electric Light Contractor McDonald on account.

The members and the press representatives then dispersed.

The annual election of officers in Scott Lodge, No. 421, A. F. and A. M. took place on Wednesday of last week.

The Presbyterian Sabbath school will hold a "Christmas tree" his evening.

SHELBURNE.

The Salvation Army had a 'time' here last week.

Geo. W. Bowers, general merchant, Honeywood, has got himself into trouble. A short time ago he made an assignment to Mr. Wm. McCutcheon, of Shelburne. It appears that previous to making the assignment over $1000 worth of goods was removed from the store to the house of a neighbor. The creditors became suspicious, discovered Bowers' little game and he is now keeping out of the way of the Toronto detective who holds a warrant for his arrest. The affair has created quite a sensation.

An elderly man who has been a guest at the Royal Hotel for several days is very absent minded. It is vouched for as a fact that he went into dinner the other day, and, after coming out and sitting round for a while, entered the dining room again and partook of a second dinner, having forgotten that he had eaten his mid-day meal only a short time before. It seems he has been in the habit of paying for meals as he took them, and only became aware of his mistake when informed of it by the landlord upon tendering payment the second time. We have heard and read of absent-minded men, but we think this fellow beats the record.

Sam Falleon, of Amaranth, has been having a good time in Melancthon in the vicinity of Hornings Mills and Redlickville. He was collecting money for an imaginary widow named Moore, who had been burnt out, as he stated, "near Corbetton. Sam raped in a good many quarters, which will never see the widow Moore (?) He secured a night's lodging at Mr. Noble's, near Redlickville, on representing that he was a cousin of Reeve Jelly, of Shelburne. He also informed Mr. Noble that he had purchased the Mammoth Skeleton from Mr. John Jelly for $10 50 and offered Mr. Noble a free passage to Liverpool and back if he would go with him on his starring tour with the greatest show on earth. It is stated that some of the gulled parties intend having a warrant issued for Samuel's arrest for obtaining money under false pretences.

COLD IN HEAD — THE 4 STAGES. — CONSUMPTION

CATARRH — DEATH.

There is positive danger to health and life in neglecting a case of Cold in the Head or Catarrh, and at this season with its changeable weather, unusual moisture and sudden changes from heat to cold, there is peculiar liability to cold in the head. A neglected case of Cold in the Head rapidly developes into Catarrh, and neglected Catarrh not a certainty developes into Consumption and leads to premature death. Medical testimony proves conclusively that a large percentage of all the deaths occurring from Consumption had their origin in a neglected Cold, which, by a radical stages, developed into Catarrh, then into Consumption, that dread disease with which medical science is so powerless to cope successfully. If you are suffering from Cold in the head, or from any of the symptoms of Catarrh, such as foul breath, dull oppressive headaches, droppings from the head to the throat, hawking and spitting, copious discharges from the nostrils, loss of sense of smell, or taste becoming dull, hacking cough, or a general feeling of debility, husky voice, wheezing or croaking sound in your chest when breathing, a feeling of dizziness, particularly when stooping, a feeling of tiredness and indisposition to exertion, a feeling of nausea in the morning when attempting to dislodge accumulations in the throat. Do not neglect them. These are but a few of the many symptoms of Catarrh, and from experience any, BE WARNED IN TIME. Do not permit them to run under the mistaken impression that the disease will eventually wear away. It will not, but on the contrary will wear you away as it has thousands before. Procure at once a bottle of NASAL BALM, the only certain and speedy cure ever offered to the public for Cold in the Head and Catarrh. This is no idle assertion, but an unquestionable fact, which is verified by thousands of testimonials in our possession telling of marvellous cures. These testimonials we have received from all parts of the Dominion, and we append a few, selected at random, as a fair sample of the whole:—

Mr. Alex. Burns, of Sydney, Ont., says:—Gents, I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh for seven or eight years, and it was attended with consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears, and sickening pain in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm are sweet breath, stoppage of the dropping into the throat (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the "Balm" will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

James H. McLeod, Mink River Road, N. S., says:—I have tried other remedies for Catarrh, but received little or no good from them. Your NASAL BALM is certainly the BEST REMEDY I have tried, and all you claim for it. The fact that it is pleasant and convenient to use adds greatly to its value, but its chief worth lies in being a CERTAIN CURE for that unpleasant disease—Catarrh.

Wm. Chas. Hanley, postmaster, Bary Bay, N. S., says:—I submit the following to the public that any who may be afflicted may be benefited by the same remedy. Two bottles of your NASAL BALM have RESTORED to PERFECT HEALTH a four year old child of mine, suffering from Catarrh.

Henrietta Blackwell Parker, Ont., says:—Your NASAL BALM is the BEST REMEDY I have yet used for Catarrh. I can breathe more freely than before and my breath has regained its sweetness. I consider NASAL BALM a boon to the suffering.

Miss Maggie M. Martin, Toronto, Ont., says:—Through a friend in Canada I became acquainted with your NASAL BALM. I have suffered for years with Catarrh, and it is the first remedy from which I have received relief, and I feel certain it will cure me.

Miss Minnie McNairn, Millie Robertson, Ont., says:—Your bottle of NASAL BALM did me much good. The pain in my head disappeared before I had used the bottle, and I find myself receiving the greatest benefit. I am certain NASAL BALM will cure my Catarrh if its use is persevered in.

Mr. John H. Adams, merchant, Stratford, Ont., says:—I have used NASAL BALM for Catarrh, and found it to be a CERTAIN CURE.

W. A. Doyle, Beulah, Man., writes:—As a family medicine to check Catarrhal affections or Cold in the Head, NASAL BALM HAS NO EQUAL. We prize it highly.

Mr. Schlenzig, Toronto, says:—For a number of years my wife has been badly troubled with Catarrh. Dr —— have prescribed to cure her, but after using his remedy for months she became worse and worse than before, and I found that I had spent $25 for medical treatment that did no good. My wife then began to use NASAL BALM, and has improved wonderfully, and she is better and stronger than for years. Your remedy is the best in the market and you can use this as testimony.

Emilie Pelletier, Grenville, says:—I can scarcely find words to tell you how highly I prize NASAL BALM. Its effects in my case have been wonderful.

Alfred W. Dales, Tarbert, Ont., writes:—Your NASAL BALM has made a new man of me. I never used a remedy so satisfactory.

Beware of imitations. If your dealer has not got NASAL BALM in stock do not let him persuade you to take any other remedy which he may say is just as good, but send direct to the undersigned and it will be sent you on receipt of price—50 cents and $1.00 per bottle.

Two thousand colliers in the Marquis of Londonderry's Seaham mines in Durham have struck owing to a dispute about wages.

Nearly all colds are slight, at first, but their tendency is to so lower the system that the sufferer becomes a ready victim to any prevalent disease. The use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral in the beginning of a cold, would guard against this danger.

We are glad to announce that Photographer W C Adair is again able to resume his work at Still's Gallery.

A Little Spark.

MAY kindle a great fire, just so dyspepsia and bad blood give rise to countless complaints which cannot be cured until the dyspepsia is removed, and the blood purified. To do this is the work of Burdock Blood Bitters, a medicine which always cures dyspepsia, bad blood and all complaints of a similar origin.

Take a look at Still's Photos, they are elegant

Life in a Lumber Camp.

WHILE working in a lumber camp a year ago I caught a severe cold which settled on my lungs, I got no relief until I tried Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam, which cured me entirely. I highly recommend it.

JAS. L. WILSON, Magnetiawan, Ont.

No remedy for blood disorders can equal Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Though concentrated and powerful, this medicine is perfectly safe, and may be taken by children as well as adults. Physicians recommend it in preference to any other. Price $1. Worth $5 a bottle

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Old sores, Wounds, and Ulcers.—The remedies with which Holloway's unguent remorseless observations in the circulation of the vascular and lymphatics explains their irresistible influence in healing old sores, bad wounds, and indolent ulcers. To insure the desired effect the skin surrounding the diseased part should be fomented, dried and immediately well rubbed with the Ointment. This will give purity to the foul blood, and strength to the weakened nerves, the only conditions necessary for the cure of all these ulcerations which render life almost intolerable. No sooner is this Ointment's protective power exerted than the destructive process ceases, and the conservative business begins—new, healthy growth appears to fill up the lately painful excavated pit.

SUCH as Calomel, Morphine, etc., are superseded by remedies better in all cases. They often weaken even strong constitutions. CONNINGHAM—DECATUR.—At St. Andrew's Church, Orangeville, on the 18th inst., by Rev J. Neil, of Toronto, assisted by Rev D C Hossack, of Orangeville, W. J. Cunningham, of Hamilton, to Sarah, daughter of J. K. Decatur.

"AGE CANNOT WITHER HER," remarked an old gentleman, as he gazed fondly upon the comely little woman by his side; "but frankly," he continued, "at one time I was afraid cosmetics would. The silly little woman, in order to spread youthful, plastered her face with different varieties of whitewash, yclept 'balms,' 'creams,' 'lotions,' etc." "Yes," interrupted the little woman, "I did, until my skin became like parchment and so pimply and coarse." "Well," said the listener, "What do you use now?" "Oh," was the reply, "nothing but common sense and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. Commonsense told me that if my blood was pure, liver active, appetite and digestion good, that the outward woman would take on the hue of health. The 'Discovery' did all those things and actually rejuvenated me." If you would possess a clear, beautiful complexion, free from blotches, pimples, eruptions, yellow spots and roughness, use the "Golden Medical Discovery." It is guaranteed to do all that it is claimed to, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded.

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may lend to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted moustache a respectable length and appearance."—H. Brigham, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either), I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—E. T. Spinnattou, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

THE SUN

1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN's opinions about men and things, and some people don't; everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested zeal. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose, it is not THE SUN's fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out with THE SUN.

where I stood. The words I heard, to me as they were, did not seem to indicate the presence of a woman, and in other circumstances a low exclamation smothered in the throat almost before it was uttered, assured me that it was a man who stood six feet from me, handling the objects which I had been told were in some way connected with a murder which I was by every instinct of honor bound to discover, if not avenge.

A man! and oh, he was so quiet, so careful! I could not even guess what he was doing, much less determine his identity, by listening. I had a conviction that he was taking the articles out of their place of concealment, but I could not be sure; and in a matter like this, certainty was indispensable. I resolved to risk all, and took another step, clinging dizzily to the first support that offered. It was well I had the presence of mind to do this, or I might have had a serious fall. For no sooner had I raised my head above the level of the floor than my eyes fell upon the well-known form of him I desired least of all men to see in this place—my lover, if you may call him so—Dwight Pollard.

Poetry.

AN UNFORGOTTEN COUNTRY.

My friend, I may not see your face,
Nor watch each well-remembered grace;
But you will always hold a place
Within my memory, though we stand
So far apart. The sea and land
Divide us; and we clasp not hand.

Yet, dear, I know, though some forget
The past, you still remember yet
The country where we two first met.

Deep in your heart it will remain,
With all its mingled joy and pain;
The past is past, and not in vain.

We would not have it back once more,
From that far-distant, silent shore
Where there is rest forevermore.

Nay, rather let us turn our eyes
To where the future hidden lies
From us. Beneath the clear blue skies

The world may have for you in store
A gift we dream not of; ay, more,
Beloved, than it gave of yore

But, dear one, you will never forget
The country where we two first met—
The country that you love so yet.

THE DOUBLE "NO."

Very fair was Katie Grey
As I met her yesterday;
Lovelist of country girls,
Full of smiles and sunned with curls,
When I saw her dimpled cheek
Something prompted me to speak;
"Can you love me, tell me true,
Katie Grey, as I love you?"

Once I asked her before,
But she smiled, and nothing more
Was said until I turned to go,
When she, blushing, answered, "No."
So I put the question plain,
And 'No" was her reply again;
But when I thought to haste away,
Gently I was urged to stay.

Yesterday we lingered long,
Till my heart and hope grew strong,
For something in her manner caught me.
When Lovely's grammar thus she taught me:
"Don't you know, or can't you guess,"
She said, "when two 'No's' mean 'Yes'?"
(All her head was sunned in curls,
Loveliest of country girls!)
Quickly I this sweet hint took,
When love was mirrored in her look:
So my joy is full to-day
Since I met you, Katie Grey,
And found two 'No's' sometimes express
From roguish lips a cordial 'Yes.'"

A Large Estate.

Amid them all, with ever-increasing popularity and helpfulness, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, giving hope and cheer where there is disease and despair. Consumption (which is lung-scrofula), yields to it, if employed in the early stages of the disease. Chronic Nasal Catarrh, yields to it; Kidney and Liver diseases, yield to it! If you want the best known remedy for all diseases of the blood, ask for Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, and take no other. A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by specialists as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

☞ Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

Make No Delay!

☞ A perfect cure for croup and colds and I can recommend Hagyard's Yellow Oil—one bottle of which cured me of a very bad cold. I would say to all sufferers, make no delay in using it as it gives quick relief.

OF THE PRINCE'S HEALTH.

HE IS SAID TO HAVE FAILED GREATLY OF LATE.

Mr. Gladstone's Reflection to Parnell in Your Behalf—Another Impressive Text Against the Abolition of Hereditary Legislators.

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—Edward Yates writes to the Tribune: The great depression of spirits, from which the Prince of Wales is at present suffering, did not escape the notice of his visitors last week. He talked constantly of his failing health, and although he has lost his old vigorous form of his weakness, it is impossible to conceal the fact that he is so entirely different man from Christmas last, when I saw him a few months ago. There will be the usual memorial service at Frogmore mausoleum next Saturday, which is to be attended by the Queen, the Prince and Princess of Wales and family, the Duke and Duchess of Edinburgh, the Duchess of Albany, Princess Louise, Princess Beatrice and Princess Christina. The German Emperor has been well ever since his return to Berlin. She has not yet recovered from the fatigues she underwent at Athens and Constantinople, and to which she was altogether unequal in her delicate health.

There has lately been an alarming increase in the number of suicides among officers of the German army. In one month twenty-eight officers shot themselves.

According to Manchester gossip, who presumably were informed by some of the Hawarden set who attended the conference in full force, Mr. Gladstone, toward the end of last session, took an opportunity of informing Mr. Parnell that he and his family were yearning to have the pleasure and honor of receiving him as what Americans term a house guest at Hawarden. Mr. Parnell did not, I understand, respond to the invitation of the aged statesman, who so triumphantly consigned him to prison only a few years ago.

The General is Coming to America.

NEW YORK, Dec. 10.—Gen. Boulanger has accepted an offer from the manager of Niblo's Theater to deliver thirty lectures in America at $700 for each lecture. The General, however, puts in this proviso, that the agreement is to be null and void "in case he is able to enter France as president of the French Republic before the end of January."

TORONTO TOPICS.

The Children to Archbishop Walsh—The Telegram Defiant—Other Notes.

TORONTO, Dec. 9.—Samuel Platt, barrister, was before the Police Court again yesterday, on the charge of having stolen a diamond ring from Jacob P. Woltz, diamond broker. The case was partly heard, and in granting another enlargement the magistrate said that the offence appeared to be one of illegal pawning rather than of larceny.

St. Michael's Cathedral yesterday afternoon resounded the sweet voices of 3,000 school children, who sang as only joyous childhood can, and who entered into the spirit of the scene which was thoroughly animating. Brilliant ecclesiastical emblems illumined the noble proportions of the church, and the manifold colored lights and candles on the high altar contributed to the impressive scene, the chief figure in which was His Grace Archbishop Walsh in archiepiscopal splendor, with the following attendant priests: Vicar-General Rooney, Vicar-General Laurent, Father McCann, Father Hand, Father Cruise, Father McPhillips, Father Walsh, Father O'Reilly, Father Gibbons. The occasion was the presentation of addresses to His Grace by the Separate School children of Toronto. The music was charming. In addition to voluntaries on the organ and some capital solo singing, the children heartily sang "Vivat Pastor Bonus," "Holy Joseph, Dearest Father," and "Mother Dearest, Mother Fairest, Help His Grace." Two illuminated addresses were presented to His Grace.

This morning H. E. Hamilton, boot and shoe manufacturer, Bay street, suspended payment. The liabilities are a little less than $40,000, of which $15,000 is owing to the trade and the balance to relatives. The assets are about $55,000, the estate thus showing a surplus of between $10,000 and $20,000. A meeting of creditors will be held on Friday afternoon.

W. F. Johnson, superintendent of the Massey Manufacturing Co., who is the defendant in the well-known seduction case of Taylor vs. Johnson, which occupied the attention of Euclid Avenue Methodist Church inquisitors for such a long time, was privately examined yesterday afternoon by Mr. James A. Macdonald, counsel for the plaintiff. The defendant pronounced the suit brought against him by A. W. Taylor, 119 Bathurst street, and his daughter, Miss Emma Taylor, the outcome of scheme to blackmail or a device to shield some guilty person. The defendant's testimony was a complete denial of all the charges made by the plaintiff and his daughter.

Alfred Harvey, 229 Front street east; Joseph Sheehan, no permanent abiding place; Joseph Liver, 205 Front street east; and William Scott, Sydenham and Sackville streets; are held at the Wilton Avenue Police Station on a charge of attempted outrage on the person of Annie Kenny, 27 years of age, who states that she has been living in service at Parkdale. She is, however, known to the police as a woman of the town.

At the Police Court yesterday, Samuel Platt, who is charged with having illegally pawned a diamond ring, valued at $200 and owned by J. P. Woltz, was again remanded on his own bail. The charge against him of having stolen the ring was withdrawn.

William Talks Peace.

FRANKFORT, Dec. 9.—At a banquet here to-day Emperor William said: "My whole striving and whole labor shall be directed to this, that I may see my country great, powerful and respected throughout the whole world. Inspired by this resolution I ascended the throne and in this thought I live. I have to-day convinced myself what fruits matured in the years during which my predecessors succeeded in preserving peace. May it please God that my endeavors to the same end may be crowned with equal success."

The Church to Become a Banker.

NEW YORK, Dec. 9.—The Herald says: A Universal Bank and Trust Company is about to be formed in this city under the special benediction of the Pope of Rome, with a capital of $100,000,000, to receive, care for and invest, not only the enormous revenues of the church, but also the private fortunes of its members. Moneys of all other persons and sects are to be received and invested as well, and the bank will do a general banking business.

Emin Pasha Not Out of Danger.

ZANZIBAR, Dec. 8.—Emin Pasha is still in a dangerous condition, but Dr. Parke hopes for its recovery unless a complication sets in. The patient has a bad cough and experiences difficulty in clearing his lungs.

WILL GIVE YOU
HEALTH
A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have become hospitals crowding with suffering humanity. Crowds of students thronged the wards to listen to the lectures of the Professors in charge. Famous renowned physicians of the world learnt their practical lore, and the instructions and experiments of years have lighted their careers. With a view of making this knowledge available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, perfected the mixtures, and although it cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their popular remedies are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure everything in creation. The Hospital Remedies make no extravagant claims. The specific for CATARRH cures that and nothing short of it, while the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLES; RHEUMATISM is cured by No. 3, while troubles of DIGESTION, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their own cure. There is a cod cure specific for FEVER and AGUE, one for FEMALE WEAKNESS—a GENERAL TONIC and BLOOD-MAKER that such a lot needs, and LOSS OF FLESH AND FULNESS, and an incomparable remedy for NERVOUS DEBILITY.

NO. 1—CURES GATHERS, PAIN, FEVERISHNESS, COLD IN THE HEAD, CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—The most delicate nose can use this without fear. Pleasant to take. Thousands have testified to its wonderful powers. For sixteen years the proprietor suffered from chronic catarrh. Three bottles are for sixty cents—enough for a cure. $1.00.

NO. 2—COUGHS, COLDS, BRONCHITIS, ASTHMA, CONSUMPTION—An incomparable remedy; does not merely stop a cough but eradicates the disease and strengthens the lungs and restores them to health. $1.00.

NO. 3—RHEUMATISM AND GOUT—Rheumatism and gout have baffled the skill of the most learned men of the medical profession. This remedy has proved a specific in the worst cases. Two bottles are sufficient to cure the most acute case. $1.00.

NO. 4—LIVER AND KIDNEYS, DYSPEPSIA AND INDIGESTION, CONSTIPATION AND DIABETES DISEASE—A favorite cleansing medicine for the great and important organs that control the health of the human system. $1.00.

NO. 5—FEVER AND AGUE; DUMB AGUE, MALARIA, NEURALGIA—For years which prevails throughout this country, this remedy has proved a specific. It is prepared to break the most obstinate cases. Second dose prevents a relapse. Two bottles are sufficient to cure the most aggravated case. $1.00.

NO. 6—FEMALE WEAKNESS, IRREGULARITIES, WHITES—Many years of broken health, accompanied with all the ills that female flesh is heir to, have been speedily cured by this remedy. Two bottles are sufficient in most cases to restore the patient to perfect health and strength. $1.00.

NO. 7—HEALTH, FORM AND FULNESS—Restores the good blood and healthy flesh. If weak, it builds up; if too active, acts like a charm. $1.00.

NO. 8—NERVOUS DEBILITY, LOSS OF POWER—A quick cure for those who have lost the vigor of youth or who have become weak and nervous through the indiscretions of early life. This is a potent, but safe remedy. Some of the most eminent medical men have given their testimony in favor of this remedy. Its charge is put at a price that places it within the reach of all classes. Two bottles are sufficient in most cases to restore the patient to perfect health. Use No. 8 and also No. 7. $1.00.

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No preparation in the world of Lung Troubles is so prompt in effect, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy."

For Home Use.

"I have tested its curative power on my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief, and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of this medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

Poetry.

ONE DESIRE BEFORE ALL OTHERS.

One desire have I before all others,
Constant through the passing years,
That the One whose love is more than brother's
Walk with me earth's vale of tears;
He who once endured, to gain my pardon,
Bloody sweat and anguish in the garden;
On the cold, hard earth who musk,
And the bitter chalice drank.

Always may my eye till death behold Him,
Visage marred, the Lamb of God,
When that midday darkness did enfold Him;
When the wine-press there He trod;
When the travail for my soul came o'er Him,
When He saw death's awful gulf before Him;
It is finished! when He cried,
Bowed His head, and for me died.

Let that day, ah, never be forgotten.
Thine the grace—the guilt was mine;
When I saw Thee, Son of God begotten,
Heard Thy patient voice divine.
With night's shadows on sin's mountains falling,
Heard the Shepherd's voice, so sweetly calling;
Saw Thee stooping from above,
To the purchase of Thy love.

Thine I am! give me love's secret token;
Blood has sealed Thee, Thou art mine;
Let the echo in my heart be spoken:
Mark me with the inward sign!
With Thee all things doing, all things daring
Living, dying, all the future sharing;
This my inmost spirit saith;
Covenant in life and death.

—J. E. BAKER.

THE MILL MYSTERY.

CHAPTER XII.

DWIGHT POLLARD.

Oh, 'tis too true! how smart
A lash that speech doth give my conscience!
—HAMLET.

He was standing with his back to me, and to all appearance he was unconscious that he was under the surveillance of any eye. I had thus a moment to collect my energies and subdue my emotions; and I availed myself of it to such good purpose that by the time he had put the board back into its place I was ready to face him. He did not turn round, however; so, after a moment of silent suspense, I mounted the last stair, and thinking of nothing, hoping for nothing, wishing for nothing, stood waiting, with my eye fixed on the domino he was now rapidly folding into smaller compass.

And then I stood, like a pallid statue, when the instant came for him to change his position, and he saw me. The cry that rose to his lips but did not escape them, the reel which his figure before it stiffened into marble, testified to the shock he had received, and also to the sense of unreality with which my appearance in this wise must have impressed him. His look, his attitude were those of a man gazing upon a spectre, and as I met his glance with mine, I was conscious of a feeling of unreality myself, as if the whole occurrence were a dream, and he and I but shadows which another moment would dissolve.

But alas! this was no more a dream than were the other strange and tragic events which had gone before; and in an instant we both knew it, and were standing face to face with wretched inquiry in the looks we fixed upon each other across the domino which had fallen from his hands. He was the first to speak.

"Miss Sterling!" he exclaimed, in a light tone, cruelly belied by the trembling lips from which it issued, "by what fortunate chance do I see you again, and in a place I should have thought to be the last you would be likely to visit?"

"By the same chance," I rejoined, "which appears to have brought you here. The desire to make sure if what I heard about the mill having been used as a secreting place for certain mysterious article, was true." And I pointed to the mask and domino lying at my feet.

His eye, which had followed my finger grew dark and troubled.

"Then it was your hand—" he impetuously began.

"Which disturbed these garments before you? Yes. And I shall make no apology for the action," I continued, "since it was done in the hope of proving false certain insinuations which had been made to me in your regard."

"Insinuations?" he repeated.

"Yes," I declared, in an agony between my longings to hear him vindicate himself and the desire to be true to the obligations I was under to Ada Reynolds. "Insinuations of the worst, the most terrible, character." Then, as I saw him fall back, stricken in something more than his pride, I hastened to inquire:

"Have you an enemy in town, Mr. Pollard?"

He composed himself with a start, looking at me fixedly, and replied in what struck me as a strange tone even for such an occasion as this:

"Perhaps."

"One who out of revenge," I proceeded, "might be induced to attach your name to suspicions calculated to rob you of your honor, if not of life?"

"Perhaps," he again returned, but this time with a firmness that almost made me recoil, though I knew it was directed against some one beside myself.

"Then it may be," I said, "that you have but to speak or unclose my mind of the burthen weight which has eyes fallen upon it. Those detectives" I pursued, "have they, or have they not, any connection with the tragedy which makes the place in which we stand unnavigable?"

"I cannot answer you, Miss Sterling."

"Cannot answer me?"

"Cannot answer you," he reiterated, turning haggard about the eyes and lips.

"Then," I brokenly rejoined, "I had better leave this place; I do not know what more I have to do or say here."

"O God!" he cried, striking me a gesture full of agony and doubt. "Do not leave me so; let me think. Let me weigh the situation and see where I stand; in your eyes at least. Tell me what my enemy has said?" he demanded, his face, his very form, flashing with a terrible rage that seemed to have as much indignation as fear in it.

"Your enemy," I replied, in the steady voice of despair, "accuses you in so many words—of murder."

"I expected to see him recoil, burst forth into cursing or frenzied declamation, by which men betray their inward consternation and remorse; but he did none of these things. Instead of that he laughed; a hideous laugh that seemed to shake the rafters above us and echoed in and out of the cavernous recesses beneath.

"Accused me?" he muttered; and it is not in language to express the scorn he infused into the words.

Stunned, and scarcely knowing what to think, I gazed at him helplessly. He seemed to feel my glance, for, after a moment's contemplation of my face, his manner changed, and bowing with a grim politeness full of sarcasm, he asked:

"And when did you see my enemy and hold this precious conversation in which I was accused of murder?"

"Yesterday afternoon," I answered.

"During the time of your mother's funeral?" I subjoined, startled by the look of stupefaction which crossed his face at my words.

"I don't understand you," he murmured, sweeping his hand in a dazed way over his brow. "You saw him then? Spoke to him? Impossible!"

"It is not a man to whom I allude," I returned almost as much agitated as himself. "It is a woman who is your accuser, a woman who seems to feel she has the right to make you suffer, possibly because she has suffered so much herself."

"A woman!" was all he said; "a woman!" turning pale enough now, God knows.

"Have you no enemies among the women?" I asked, wearied to the soul with the position in which my cruel fate had forced me.

"I begin to think I have," he answered, giving me a look that somehow broke down the barriers of ice between us and made my next words come in a faltering tone:

"And could you stop to bestow a thought upon a man while a woman held your secret? Did you think our sex was so long-suffering, or this special woman so generous——"

I did not go on, for he had leaped the gap which separated us and had me gently but firmly by the arm.

"Of whom are you speaking?" he demanded. "What woman has my secret—is secret I have? Let me hear her name, now, at once."

"Is it possible," I murmured, "that you do not know?"

"The name! the name! he reiterated, his eyes ablaze, his hand shaking where it grasped my arm.

"Rhoda Colwell," I returned, looking him steadily in the eye.

"Impossible!" his lips seemed to breathe, and his clasp slowly unloosed from my arm like a ring of ice which melts away. "Rhoda Colwell! Good God!" he exclaimed, and staggered back with ever growing wonder and alarm till half the room lay between us.

"I am not surprised at your emotion," I said; "she is a dangerous woman."

He looked at me with dull eyes; he did not seem to hear what I said.

"How can it be?" he muttered; and his glance took a furtive aspect as it travelled slowly round the room and finally settled upon the mask and domino at my feet. "Was it she who told you where to look for those?" he suddenly queried in an almost violent tone.

I bowed; I had no wish to speak.

"She is an imp, a witch, an emissary of the Evil One," he vehemently declared; and turning away, murmuring, as it seemed to me, those sacred words of Scripture, "Be sure your sin will find you out."

I felt the sobs rise in my throat. I could bear but little more. To recover myself, I looked away from him, even passed to a window and gazed out. Any thing but the sight of humiliation in one who could easily have been my idol. I was therefore standing with my back to him when he finally approached, and touching me with the tip of his finger, calmly remarked:

"I did not know you were acquainted with Miss Colwell."

"Nor was I till yesterday," I rejoined. "Fate made us know each other at one interview, if one could be said to ever know such a woman as she is."

"Fate is to blame for much; is it also to blame for the fact that you sought her? Or did she seek you?"

"I sought her," I said; and, not seeing my better self to a proper appreciation of my conduct thus the truth, I told him in a few words of the notice I had seen posted upon the mill, and of how I had afterwards surprised Rhoda Colwell there, and what the conclusions were which I had thereby drawn; though from some motive of delicacy I do not yet understand, I refrained from saying anything about her disguise, and left him to infer that it was in her own proper person I had seen her.

"He seemed to be both wonder stricken and moved by the recital, and did not rest till he had won from me the double fact that Rhoda Colwell evidently knew much more than she revealed, while I, on the contrary, knew much less. The latter discovery seemed to greatly gratify him; and while his brow lost some of the look of heavy anxiety which had settled upon it with the introduction of the woman's name into our colloquy, I noticed that his voice was lighter, and that he surveyed me with less distrust and possibly with less fear. His next words showed the direction his thoughts were taking.

"You have shown an interest in my fate, Miss Sterling, in spite of the many reasons you had for thinking it a degraded one, and for this I thank you with all my heart. Will you prove your womanliness still farther by clinging to the belief which I have endeavoured to force upon you, notwithstanding all you have heard and seen, I stand in no wise amenable to the law, neither have I uttered, in your hearing at least, aught but the truth in regard to this whole matter?"

"And you can swear this to me?" I uttered, joyfully.

"By my father's grave, if you desire it," he returned.

A flood of hope rushed through my heart. I was but a weak woman, and his voice and look at that moment would have affected the coldest nature.

"I am bound to believe you," I said; "though there is much I do not understand—much which you ought to explain if you wish to disabuse my mind of all doubt in your regard. I would be laying claim to a cynicism I do not possess, if I did not trust your words just so far as you will allow me. But——" And I must have assumed an air of severity, for I saw his head droop lower as I gazed at him and forbore to finish my sentence.

"But you believe I am a villain," he stammered.

"I would fain believe you to be the best and noblest of men," I answered pointedly.

He lifted his head, and the flush of a new emotion swept over his face.

"Why did I not meet you years ago?" he cried.

The tone was so bitter, the regret he expressed so unutterable, I could not help my heart sinking again with the weight of fresh doubt which it brought.

"Would it have been better for me if you had?" I enquired. "Is the integrity which is dependent upon one's happiness or the sympathy of friends, one that a woman can trust to under all circumstances of temptation or trial?"

"I do not know," he muttered. "I think it would stand firm with you for its safeguard and shield." Then, as he saw me draw back with an assumption of coldness I was far from feeling, added gently: "But it was not you, but Rhoda Colwell I met two years ago, and I know too well, appreciate you too well, to lay ought but my sincerest homage at your feet, in the hope that, whatever I may have been in the past, the future shall prove me to be not unworthy of your sympathy, and possibly of your regard."

And, as if he felt the stress of the interview becoming almost too great for even his strength, he turned away from me and began gathering up the toggery which lay upon the floor.

"These must not remain here," he observed bitterly.

But I, drawn this way and that by the most contradictory emotions, felt that all had not been said which should be in this important and possibly final interview. Accordingly, smothering personal feeling and stealing myself to look only on my duty, I advanced to his side, and indicating with a gesture the garments he was now rolling up into a compact mass, remarked:

"This may or may not involve you in some unpleasantness. Rhoda Colwell, who evidently attaches much importance to her discoveries, is not the woman to keep silent in their regard. If she speaks and forces me to speak, I must own the truth, Mr. Pollard. Neither sympathy nor regard could hold me back; for my honor is pledged to the cause of Mr. Barrows, and not even the wreck of my own happiness could deter me from revealing anything that would explain his death or exonerate his memory. I wish you to understand this. God grant I may never be called upon to speak!"

"It was a threat, or a warning, or a danger for which he was wholly unprepared. He stared at me for a moment from his lowly position on the floor, then slowly rose and mechanically put his hand to his throat, as if he felt himself choking.

"I thanking you for your frankness," he murmured, in almost inaudible tones. "It is no more than I ought to have expected and yet——" He turned abruptly away. "I am evidently in a worse situation than I imagined," he continued, after a momentary pacing of the floor. "I thought only my position in your eyes was imperiled; I see now that I may have to defend myself before the world." And, with a sudden change that was almost fierce, he asked if Rhoda Colwell had intimated in any way the source of whatever information she possessed to have.

I told him no, and felt my heart grow cold with new and undefined fears as he turned his face toward the front of the building, and cried, in a suppressed tone, full of ire and menace:

"It could have come but in one way; I am to be made a victim if——" He turned upon me with a wild look in which there was something personal. "Are you worth the penalty which my good name must suffer?" he violently cried. "For I swear that to you and you only I owe the position in which I now stand!"

"God help me then," I murmured, dazed and confounded by this unexpected reproach.

"Had you been less beautiful, less alluring in your dignity and grace, my brother——" He paused and bit his lip. "Enough!" he cried. "I have wellnigh forgotten that generosity and forbearance are to actuate my movements in the future. I beg your pardon—and his!" he added, with deep and bitter sarcasm, under his breath.

This allusion to Guy, unpleasant and shocking as it was, gave me a peculiar sensation that was not unlike that of relief, while at the same moment the glimpse of something, which I was fain to call a revelation, visited my mind and led me impetuously to say:

"I hope you are not thinking of sacrificing yourself for another less noble and less generous than yourself. If such is the clew to motions which certainly have looked dubious till now, I pray that you will reconsider your duty and not play the Don Quixote too far."

But Dwight Pollard, instead of accepting this explanation of his conduct with the eagerness of a great relief, only shook his head and declared:

"My brother—for I know mean, Miss Sterling—is no more amenable to the law than myself. Neither of us were guilty of the action that terminated Mr. Barrows' life."

"And yet," came in the strange unexpected tones of a third person, "can you say, in the presence of her you profess to respect and of me whom you once professed to love, that either you or your brother are guiltless of his death?" and turning simultaneously towards the doorway, we saw gleaming in its heavy frame the vivid form and glittering eyes of his most redoubtable enemy and mine—Rhoda Colwell.

He fell back before this apparition and appeared to lose his power of speech. She advanced like an avenging Nemesis between us.

"Speak!" she vehemently exclaimed. "Are you—I say nothing of your brother who is nothing to me or her—are you guiltless, in the sense in which she would regard guilt, of David Barrows' death?" And her fierce eyes, shining through her half closed lashes like lurid fires partly valled, burned upon his face, which, turning paler and paler, drooped before her gaze till his chin settled upon his breast and we could barely hear the words that fell from his lips:

"God knows I would not dare to say I am."

JOHN GREEN & SON.

Andrew Young, the author of "There is a Happy Land," died a fortnight ago at his home in Edinburgh at the age of 82. He was a vigorous old man who was able to address a public meeting of children as recently as last summer. He wrote the famous hymn to fit the melody, an old tune from India which greatly impressed him the first time he heard it and which haunted him. He never received a penny for the words, though they have been translated into 10 languages. A group of gutter children in the slums of London singing this hymn brought tears to the eyes of Thackeray. Mr. Young was formerly bandmaster of Madras College, St. Andrews.

No Exaggeration.

Mr. Jas. O. Terrault, residing at 34 Daly Street, Ottawa, thus expressed himself:—I am pleased to state that Nasal Balm has already relieved my catarrh to a very great extent. I have not used one bottle, but the nauseous droppings from the head and throat have almost ceased. I breathe very now, get better sleep, and altogether feel and appreciate the wonderful virtues of the "Balm." Its merits cannot possibly be exaggerated for catarrhal troubles and as a cure I believe it to be genuine.

NEWS OF THE DOMINION.

THE ONTARIO HOUSE TO MEET ON JAN. 30.

The Robert Grant Forgery Another Supreme Sensation—A Case of Smallpox in Colchester Township.

OTTAWA, Dec. 18.—The latest elopement reported is that of a young machinist, who three years ago married his estimable young woman in the West End. He drove his wife on Saturday last and yesterday was missing. It was rather startling intelligence to the young wife, who had not seen him since Saturday morning, to be informed that he had eloped with a young lady, a former sweetheart of his, and had gone to Philadelphia.

Bradley & Snow, representing James Leggatt of Montreal, who is being sued by W. E. Brown for $25,000 damages in connection with the recent suits, will shortly move before the Toronto courts to make Mrs. Albina Baker a party to Mr. Brown's $25,000 suit, she having as claimed given a written guarantee at the time of her settlement that she would protect the creditors from any suits that might subsequently be brought by Mr. Brown.

TORONTO TOPICS.

Ontario Immigration Statistics—A Township Cause in Court.

TORONTO, Dec. 18.—A meeting of Catholic Bishops will be held at St. Michael's Palace this morning to nominate the successor at London of Bishop Walsh, now Archbishop of Toronto. The usual course will be followed. The Archbishop will preside; the Bishops will confer and select three names for the vacant post. These three nominees, having received unanimous assent will be forwarded by His Grace to Rome, and the Holy See will appoint one of the nominees to the London episcopic. It is probable that the new Bishop will be Father O'Connor, who is the present administrator of the London diocese, who has the hearty sympathy of Archbishop Walsh, and who is highly respected by the clergy.

The voters of West Toronto Junction yesterday carried by 315 majority the $150,000 bylaw providing for the necessary funds required to build the two subways on Keele street and the Weston road, which the Canadian Pacific Railway Company ask in return for establishing their repair shops there for the Ontario system and making it the centre of their whole Ontario system.

The Grand Jury yesterday returned a true bill against Arthur Chamberlain, charged with assaulting the police. No bills were returned in the cases of Elizabeth Charlton, charged with fraud, and Clarence Vance, charged with indecent assault.

The Dominion Alliance begins its annual convention in Richmond Hall this morning. Delegates are already on hand from different parts of the province and indications are that there will be a lively meeting. The ever-pressing questions of legislation and political action are what will most likely lead to discussion. The meetings are free to all. A large attendance is anticipated.

Mr. Hector Cameron, Q.C., yesterday filed at Osgoode Hall his statement of defence in his now somewhat famous case of "The Federal Bank against Samuel Nordheimer and the Commercial Loan Company," in which the directors of the bank seek to recover a large sum of money from its expresident for alleged mismanagement of the bank's affairs. The amount claimed from Mr. Nordheimer is said to be in the neighborhood of half a million. The statement of defence, which covers eight pages of foolscap written copy, is a general denial of the allegations against Mr. Nordheimer, as filed by the solicitor for the directors, Hon. S. H. Blake.

No more touching sight has been witnessed in the Quarter Sessions than when 10-year-old Minnie Welsh stood in the witness box yesterday to testify against her mother, who was on trial for manslaughter. Mrs. Mary Welsh on Dec. 5 left her little children in the house alone, and one of them in her absence was burned to such extent that she died shortly after. The testimony brought out that the prisoner is somewhat addicted to drink and has been known to be the victim of temporary fits of insanity. Mr. J. G. S. Lindsey defended the prisoner and Judge Macdougall took the case from the jury and entered a verdict of not guilty. Before discharging the prisoner he gave her some timely counsel to be warned by the calamity which had taken away one of her little ones and leave drink alone.

Mr. David Spence, secretary of the Ontario Immigration Department, has issued a return showing the arrivals of immigrants in the province for the eleven months from Jan. 1 to Nov. 30, 1889. The return shows that there was the remarkable decrease in the number of arrivals of 23,570 over the same period of last year. The table is as follows:

| | Number to Nov. 30 Arrivals via Quebec | Number to Nov. 30 Arrivals via Portland | Increase | Decrease | Net Increase | Net Decrease |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| 1889 | 46,879 | 6,197 | 161 | 1,523 | 14,682 | |
| 1888 | 32,360 | 6,174 | 170 | 1,460 | 23,756 | |
| Increase | 14,519 | 17,77 | 20 | 63 | 1,07 | |
| Decrease | | | | | | |

This decrease is no doubt attributable to the abolition of assisted passages. The great bulk of its arrivals, as in former years, were English, Irish, Scotch and Germans, the English largely predominating.

The Local House to Meet Jan. 30.

TORONTO, Dec. 18.—The Ontario Legislature has been called to meet for the despatch of business on Thursday, Jan. 30 next.

Down the Quebec Precipice.

QUEBEC, Dec. 18.—The 5-year-old daughter of Mr. T. H. Jones of the Quebec Bank, and her aunt, while out for an airing, had a most perilous fall and their escape from death was remarkable. The aunt was pulling a sleigh in which sat the little girl and approached the edge of the cliff. The sleigh steered on the incline and dragged both aunt and niece down the precipice, a height of 200 feet and almost perpendicular. They landed safe and sound in a yard in Sault au Matelot street in Lower Town, to the great wonder of all who witnessed the precipitous descent.

The Ancient Capital.

QUEBEC, Dec. 18.—A lumberman of St. Henri de Levis had both his legs broken by a tree falling on them while at work at Black Lake a few days ago. It was two days before a doctor could be had to set the broken limbs, during which the unfortunate man suffered excruciating agony and is now in a critical condition.

THE HIGHER POSITIONS.

As we have previously stated it would be very hard to chose three better qualified men than those in the field to fill the responsible positions of mayor, reeve and deputy reeve, and we still hold the same opinion. The ratepayers, we believe, share it also. No person will say that Mr. W. L. Walsh would not make an excellent mayor; and everybody admits Mr. Lindsay is the right man for reeve; while Mr. Kearns is acknowledged to be a first class deputy reeve. They have faithfully served the town in the past, and we hope to see them honored by being elected by acclamation, which is very probable from present indications.

IN THE WARDS.

Candidates for the council are beginning to get numerous as nomination day approaches. Since our last issue, several new aspirants have announced themselves as anxious to occupy a chair at the green table for the coming year.

In the North ward J. E. Ewings is the latest claimer of the electors' votes. Messrs. Tourneans, Ketchum and Ewings are the only gentlemen in the field so far. No new aspirants for the school board have come to light.

The South ward has four men in the field, Messrs. King, May, Hubbard and Geo. Dunning, formerly of Amaranth. A rumor was going the rounds yesterday to the effect that Jimmy had given up the notion of running, but we cannot vouch for the truth of it. The chances of Messrs. King and Hubbard are very bright, and they are looked upon as sure winners.

Everything is quiet in the East, and the general impression is that Messrs. Bailey and Coburn will be returned without opposition.

Mr. Robert Mann is out for the West, and a triangular contest is sure to take place. Mr. Marshall Green is an honest, intelligent man, and will sail in at the head of the poll with flying colors. The battle between Mr. Mann and Mr. Gillespie promises to be very interesting, and we hope to the more suitable man elected. Messrs. J. R. Dodds, Geo. Wilcox and Wm. Cruikshanks are in the field for the school trusteeship.

Nominations for mayor, reeve, deputy reeve, councillors and school trustees will take place in the town hall at 7:30 o'clock on Monday evening next.

THE Toronto Trades and Labor council has passed a resolution asking for the dismissal of Judge Morgan, because of his opinion as to the wisdom of the local lien law. It is not likely the request will be acceded to. It is not counted regular to this country to remove Judges at the instance of disappointed suitors. If it were, preferment from the Bar to the Bench would be somewhat livelier than it is.

A valuable discovery of iron ore has been made 35 miles east of Sault Ste. Marie. An analysis proves the ore to be of excellent quality. The mine is but 600 yards from the C. P. R. and two miles from a deep water shipping point on the lakes, close to the American channel, and thence direct to Cleveland or Pittsburg, being some three hundred miles nearer to the principal ore markets than Marquette on Lake Superior, and saving 30 miles of towage besides the delay and cost of passing through St. Mary's canal with every advantage for the smelting of the ore on the spot, there being a quantity of excellent sandstone in the immediate vicinity, besides an abundance of wood fit for charcoal.

CONCERT AT CAMILLA.—The congregation of St. Alban's church, Mono, will hold a grand entertainment at Camilla, on Wednesday, Jan. 1st. Readings, recitations etc., and "Mrs. Jarley's Waxworks" will form the programme. A large crowd will undoubtedly attend.

TO DAY'S SUPPLEMENT.—We are able this week to furnish our readers with a full report of Mr. Meredith's great speech delivered at London on Monday the 16th inst. Our readers we trust, will peruse one of the greatest speeches of the day, as this is one and well deserves to be read.

THE BAND DID IT.—On Saturday evening, while the Salvation Army Band were parading, a team took fright in front of Wyllie's butcher shop, and, beginning to plunge, tumbled over each other. One of the horses was severely hurt. We have not learned the owner's name.—Owen Sound Advertiser.

ST. MARK'S CHURCH.—On Sunday next the duty will be taken in St. Mark's both morning and evening, by Rev. J. Walsh, incumbent of Bolton, and late Grand Chaplain of the Orange Association. Mr. Walsh is a convert from the Reformed Episcopal Sect, and on Sunday he will give some account of the steps which led to his conversion.

[illegible] special entertainment under the auspices of the Cardwell football club, which should have taken place at Camilla on Friday night, has been postponed until February, on account of the disagreeable weather. Persons who have purchased tickets will please retain them until a date is definitely fixed upon. Notice will appear in these columns at the proper time.

SQUIRE WILSON IS COLLECTOR.—Mr. Robert Wilson, of Rosemary, has been appointed collector of customs for Orangeville, duties to begin with the new year. It is almost needless to say that there are a good number of disappointed office seekers, who expected that he should fill the position and draw a salary of $500 a year. Mr. Wilson, we believe, will give good satisfaction while he occupies that office. He will move to town in a few days. We congratulate the Squire and welcome him to the Capital of Dufferin.

ORANGEVILLE IN DARKNESS.—At half past ten o'clock on Tuesday evening the electric lights went out and left the town in total darkness. One reporter walked down to the electric light station and learned the cause of the stoppage. The water flowed in around the main driving wheel and soaked the large leather belt, and compelled them to shut down, leaving the stores and the streets in complete darkness. It is a curious fact that when the lights are most needed something always goes wrong. However, we hope this will be the last time darkness prevails on important occasions. The lights were turned on again last night.

SHE WANTS HEAVY DAMAGES.—Mrs. Annie Scott, of Peterboro', has brought action against Henry L. Atkinson, of Mono, for the killing of her son, James B. Scott, who met his death at Dan Markle's fish-pond last May. The amount she claims is $10,000. Our readers are already familiar with the unfortunate tragedy which occurred at Glen Cross during the above mentioned month. Atkinson has been twice acquitted of the charge of killing the unfortunate Scott: first by a coroner's jury and then by a jury at the last sitting of the Dufferin assizes. The case will probably come up at the spring assizes. We had hoped the last was heard of that lamentable tragedy, but it seems the case will be opened once more.

SHELBURNE.

Last Saturday, while chopping in the woods, Alfred Bell, son of Mr. Wm. Bell, of Primrose, almost severed one of his great toes.

Word has been received to the effect that Mr. Andrew Gray, son of Mr. Wm. Gray, teacher, Melancthon, is lying seriously ill of typhoid fever at Little Current, Manitoulin.

Last Thursday afternoon Peter McGrath, while working in Mr. Silink's sawmill at Colbeckton, had his hand so badly injured by coming in contact with the saw that Dr. Norton had to amputate two of his fingers.

Mr. John Witter, of the Mansion House, Shelburne, was offered the position of Collector of Customs at Orangeville. The salary is $500. Mr. Witter declined the offer on Saturday last. He is quite satisfied to remain in Shelburne.

PAINFUL KICK.—On Saturday afternoon last as Mr. Richard Fewester, of Hornings Mills, was assisting in capturing a colt belonging to Mr. Robt. Hartley, he received a bad wound on the face, the result of a kick from the colt. Dr. Lawrence dressed the wound which required a stitch or two. Mr. Fewester is doing nicely and is able to be around.

DANGEROUS.—On Friday last two mastiff dogs owned by Mr. R. Falconer, of Shelburne, attacked his nephew, a little fellow about 13 years of age, and gave him several bad wounds on his head and legs. Messrs. Hemstreet and Henderson, who reached the boy were under the impression that he was badly hurt, but the case is not at all serious. The owner claims that the dogs are not cross, but that keeping them confined has a tendency to make them so. The boy is getting better.

THE HYNDMAN LIQUOR CASE.—Our readers will remember that some time ago D Hyndman, of Grand Valley, appeared before Magistrates J. D. Wilson and Wm. Jelly, of Shelburne, charged with selling liquor during prohibited hours. The offence was clearly proven, but counsel for the defence, Mr. Dunbar set up certain technical objections which caused the magistrates to reserve judgment. Counsel for the prosecution Mr. Douglas, claimed that the objections were not well taken, and went to the trouble of obtaining the opinion of eminent lawyers in support of his contention resulting in the magistrates making a conviction in Hyndman's case. In addition to a fine of $20 Hyndman will have a heavy bill of costs to pay.—Free Press and Economist.

$10,000 Found in an Ash Barrel.

A New York rag-picker is reported to have found $10,000 in greenbacks in an ash barrel. This was a rare piece of good luck, but how much more fortunate is the sufferer from consumption who learns that, although the doctors may have pronounced his case hopeless, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will cure him. Consumption is a scrofulous disease of the lungs. The "Discovery," which is the most potent blood purifier of the age, strikes right at the root of the evil, and there is no resisting it, if taken in time. In all scrofulous or other blood taints, skin and scalp diseases, old sores and swellings, it is guaranteed to cure, or money paid for it promptly refunded. By druggists.

May kindle great fire, just so dyspepsia and bad blood give rise to disease that complicate which can not be cured until the dyspepsia is removed, and the blood purified. To do this be the work of Burdock Blood Bitters, a medicine which always cures dyspepsia, bad blood and all complaints of a similar origin.

IF A BODY MEET A BODY
the result is a collision, whether "coming thro' the rye," or not. Life is full of collisions. We are constantly colliding with some bodily or something. If a body, when overtaken by an ill-natured cold, contains the seeds or all the trouble and pain that follows in its train, it behoves us all to know how to meet the enemy successfully. It is not to be met by force, but by strategy. Dr. Pierce's Pellets are the most effective and easy of all pills. They have to lose the ground of the cold and all its attendant ills, when attacked. In all cases of nervousness, bearing-down sensations, constipation, periodical pains, sick headache, congestion, inflammation, or obstruction and all "female irregularities," and "weaknesses," Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription comes to the rescue of women as no other medicine does. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that if it will give satisfaction in every case of money paid for it will be refunded. See guarantee on bottle-wrapper.

CREDIT FORKS.

A number of our citizens celebrated Christmas by indulging in a free fight, and men and women took a hand in the fray.

Mr. Hillis, proprietor of one of our quarries, is mining, instead of stripping, for the famous C.V.R. red rock, and in down in the mountain about 80 feet.

The heavy gale of last night blew down a monster tree on the road between the Forks and Bellountain. Traffic is suspended for the present.

A big land slide occurred at Ulliksohn's quarry on Tuesday, owing to the heavy rains. Thousands of tons of earth and stone covered the Dominion road to a depth of 4 feet, for a distance of 100 feet.

At the regular meeting of Credit Forks Lodge No 303, A.O.U.W., the following brethren were elected officers for the ensuing year:—Bro. Jas. Dent, Master Workman; Bro. Geo. Bruce, Foreman; Bro. W. Fox Overseer; Bro. Jas. Shaw, Recorder; Bro. H. Pattullo, Financier; Bro. Geo Smith, Receiver; Bro. Jas. Cann, Inside Watch; Bro. R. Hills, Outside Watch. Bro. A. E. Collins, delegate to Grand Lodge.

AN INSANE COWBOY.

PENDLETON, Oregon, Dec. 10.—The passengers who arrived here yesterday on a train from Portland had a trip which they are not likely to forget. A madman armed with a heavy revolver and bowie knife, had charge of the train all the way, and everyone was forced to do his bidding. After the train had left Portland, a tall, handsome man, with pale complexion, dark moustache and eyes, wearing long yellow boots and a pistol belt, jumped to his feet and began a harangue about insane asylums and physicians. To Brakeman Wensley he took an especial aversion because of a secret order badge which Wensley wore on his vest. He placed his pistol at Wensley's back and paraded him through the cars. Then he would command him to halt, and, saying in a solemn tone, "You are guilty," would threaten to shoot him if he moved. Then pulling a small camera from his pocket he photographed the trembling brakeman, saying he needed his picture for the rogues' gallery. At Umatilla Conductor Dunn telegraphed the facts to this place, and when the train reached here Sheriff Houser and Constable Taylor met it. The lunatic was on the platform with his revolver still pointed at the brakeman. They jumped upon the man and as they did so he pulled the trigger, but one of the officers had his finger under it and saved the brakeman a life. The man said he was James McGreen Arnold, from Yakima, a cowboy.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. NB—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS

As to Purity and Wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tarter powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances. E. G. LOVE, Ph.D."

"It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure. "H. A. MOTT, Ph.D."

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, terra alba, or any other injurious substance. HENRY MORTON, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. R. DAVIS HAYES, State Assayer, Mass."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, New York, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

NOTE—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

THE CARE OF CHILDREN.

Don't tell the faults or cute sayings of the child in his presence.

Don't manifest a spirit of partiality. Children are sure to detect this.

Don't encourage in a small child that for which you will punish him when older.

When you promise a child something don't forget to fulfill the promise to the letter.

Don't be constantly menacing a child with "I'll whip you," or "I'll put a stick over you."

Don't trample mercilessly under foot the wishes of a child, but respect them as far as possible.

Don't ever let him see in you a trace of the "I'm bigger than you and you've got to mind" spirit.

Don't punish a child in anger, but let him know that you dislike the task, but perform it for his good.

Don't say "Oh, do hush up!" or "Don't bother me with so many questions," when a child questions you.

Don't feel it beneath your dignity to give a child the reason for a refusal, if practicable so to do; if it is not your former conduct, should have inspired such confidence toward you that he will cheerfully submit, though he does not understand your motive.

Constipation

Demands prompt treatment. The results of neglect may be serious. Avoid all harsh and drastic purgatives, the tendency of which is to weaken the bowels. The best remedy is Ayer's Pills. Being purely vegetable, their action is prompt and their effect always beneficial. They are an admirable Liver and After-dinner pill, and everywhere endorsed by the profession.

"Ayer's Pills are highly and universally spoken of by the people about here. I make daily use of them in my practice."—Dr. I. E. Fowler, Bridgeport, Conn.

"I can recommend Ayer's Pills above all others, having long proved their value as a cathartic for myself and family."—J. T. Hess, Leitholsville, Pa.

"For several years Ayer's Pills have been used in my family. We find them an

Effective Remedy

for constipation and indigestion, and are never without them in the house."—Moses Grenier, Lowell, Mass.

"I have used Ayer's Pills, for liver troubles and indigestion, during many years, and have always found them prompt and efficient in their action."—L. N. Smith, Utica, N. Y.

"I suffered from constipation which assumed such an obstinate form that I feared it would cause a stoppage of the bowels. Two boxes of Ayer's Pills effected a complete cure."—D. Burke, Lacc, Mo.

"I have used Ayer's Pills for the past thirty years and consider them an invaluable family medicine. I know of no better remedy for liver troubles, and have always found them a prompt cure for dyspepsia."—James Quinn, 59 Middle st., Hartford, Conn.

"Having been troubled with costiveness, which seems inevitable with persons of sedentary habits, I have tried Ayer's Pills, hoping for relief. I am glad to say that they have served me better than any other medicine. I arrive at this conclusion only after a faithful trial of their merits."—Samuel T. Jones, Oak st., Boston, Mass.

THE SUN

1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN's opinions about men and things, and some people don't; everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose, it is not THE SUN's fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is a duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out with THE SUN.

Poetry

KISSED BY THE LIPS OF DEATH.

I [illegible]
My love, like a paradise blown
Blows down on the breath of a sigh,
And held by a thread of the loom
That weaveth all things beautiful—
Even flowers and fair, earthly things,
And purpling white horse through the gates
On the summer's shadowy wings.

And then, as I sat in the dusk,
I sang in a confident tone;
"Mine, all mine. No matter what comes,
This blossom is always my own."
But, lo! as the words left my lips,
A stranger bent over me there,
Dispelling procession with me
For this, of all flowers the most fair.

"Not thine, but my beloved one," he said,
"And this is the seat of my right."
He kissed the white brow of the child,
And, smiling passed into the night.
Oh! I knew the face of him then,
As I felt the chill of his breath,
I knew that the child in my arms
Had been kissed by the lips of Death.

I WONDER.

I wonder when my day will be,
When death shall come to tell to me
The story that we all must hear?
When with the silence drawing near
I feel my hold on earth so weak,
My pale lips have no power to speak
Of anguish or of ecstasy,
Ah, lowly house the grasses under,
When will ye ope to welcome me,
Your silent guest to be, I wonder?

I wonder if it will be spring
When o'er my head the birds will sing
Their first sweet song, not set to words;
And which of all the many birds
Will be the first to carol there,
When I, forever done with care,
Just like a child tired out with play,
Sleep all the night and all the day
So peacefully my green roof under?
Will it be autumn time, I wonder?

I wonder if I shall be glad
To leave the pain I long have had?
Or if from friends who love me so,
But with reluctance I shall go—
Go out upon that journey long,
So voiceless I shall sing no song?
Ah, chain of life's fair warp and woof,
When will your bright links drop asunder?
When will I sleep beneath the roof
Thatched with the violets I wonder?

THE CANDIDATE.

Who comes and grasps you by the hand,
And welcomes you with greeting bland,
And flattery you can't withstand?
The candidate.

Who asks you how the children do,
And how the world is using you,
And hopes you'll help to put him through?
The candidate.

Who says the country's going to smash
Unless you help his side to thrash
The other side with vote and cash?
The candidate.

Who begs you to give him your vote,
And says your interests he'll promote,
And tries to cut his rival's throat?
The candidate.

Who, when his victory is won,
Will straight forget all you have done,
And look out sharp for number one?
The candidate.

SUNBEAMS.

First cigar—Where are you going? Second cigar—Out.

The discharge of Mr. Sullivan from the sporting paper would seem to indicate that the fist is mightier than the pen.

"How do you like that cigar?" "W l must confess—" "What?" "That I can suspect some of it would have made an excellent pair of shoes."

"It is with love as with soup—the first helping is always too hot and the last always too cold."

Visitor—"What is your son's name?" Mother—"Stocking P. Smith; but we call him socks Socks for short."

The gentleman who discovered that his wife was putting her pin money in the bank against a rainy day, now calls it her safety-pin money.

As the sign "Shut the the Door," does no good, a wise business man has tacked on his door the words "Come in Through the Roof." This puzzles the door opener, and while he is thinking of it he abstractedly closes the orifice.

"Well John," said a gentleman to his servant, "I must say that it doesn't take me half the time to dress that it does you." "No doubt sir; no doubt; but then, sir, we are not alike, sir, for I've no valet to help me, sir."

Chicago mother—Weren't you and Mr Wheezy cold in the parlor to-night? The furnace fire went out."

Daughter—"Yes I was a little cold at first, mamma, but after a while George's arm kept me from freezing. I shall never forget his kindness.

"The subject we are to discuss is whiskey," said the fifth temperance orator of the evening, "and I trust that in the short time allotted to me I shall be able to give my hearers a taste of the subject."

Loud applause from the audience.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Notes from the Capital City by Our own Correspondent.

At high noon Monday for the first time in nine months, the flag floated from the staffs on the two wings of the Capitol. Before the colors were lowered the fifty-first Congress of the United States was duly organized, and the Senate, House and executive are now formally in the hands of the Republican party.

The attractions on the House side were the greater. The staid dignity of the Senate, with its old-time members and officers, promised little of excitement but in the popular body—a decided majority was about to undertake the work of organization, menaced by a minority upon whom graciousness the success of the undertaking in a large measure depended. That minority, softened by temporary adversities and the lapse of time since the windy battles over the tariff bill, was gentle and amiable until the majority proposed to rob them of the spiritual consolation of their chaplain. Then it asserted itself, and, reinforced by a contingent of independent Republicans, it taught the majority how slender was the margin upon which partisan measures could found themselves, by re-electing the Democratic chaplain. The parliamentary victory of the Democracy, although in a thoroughly unimportant matter, carried it a lesson that will in coming months temper the audacity of plungers and Hotspurs.

The old members as a rule took their former seats and the new members scattered themselves in the remaining vacant chairs. The hall of the House was packed to the limit of every available inch. Yet to the old observers of Congressional matters there was a great gap on the Democratic side of the House. Amid all the familiar faces those of Samuel J. Randall and Samuel Sullivan Cox were missing.

The Department buildings in the early morning hours are just now scenes of unusual activity. This is due mainly to the presence of members of Congress who endeavor to attend to business before the department and then go to the Capitol. The Post Office department is visited perhaps by a larger number of Senators and representatives than any other department. The post offices are the magnet that draws them there. The time of the officials is pretty well taken up in attending to the wants of the legislators. After a while, when Congress will begin to get ready for business it is likely that the time of the clerical force will be pretty much occupied in furnishing information to answer the questions which are asked in the form of joint and special resolutions and by requests from chairmen of committees.

Among the startling statements in regard to pensions submitted by Secretary Noble in his report is the one to the effect that over one thousand million dollars have been paid in pensions since 1861 and that there are now pending four hundred and seventy nine thousand pension claims. The Secretary asks for over eighty-nine millions as paid this year, he states that a million and a half of that sum was received by pension attorneys.

When the wheels of the new Congress were set in motion, Speaker Reed thanked his friends for the honor they had conferred upon him, and took a somewhat new departure in defining the duties of his office as having both a political and a parliamentary character. It is well understood the the office has this two fold character, but the fact is seldom stated with such frankness. He will now have the pleasure and perplexity of forming his committees and then the business of legislation will begin in earnest. Not much is likely to be accomplished before the holidays, and the chances are that the month will be wasted.

It can hardly be charged by the political purist that Senator Vance, who has introduced a bill for the repeal of the civil service law, is after the spoils. Senator Vance is a Democrat, and the distribution of patronage is in the hands of a Republican administration. But Senator Vance knows a straw when he sees it.

Business before the Senate is opening in great shape. Five hundred and four bills were introduced on Wednesday, to say nothing of a large assortment of petitions and joint resolutions.

The most universally commended appointment of the present administration is that of Gen. Baum to the Commissionership of Pensions from which the voluble Tanner was so uncermoniously ejected. At the Capitol, regardless of party differences, one hears only commendation of the executive ability of the present Commissioner of Pensions.

'THE CROWNING WORK OF MY LIFE.'

It is the result of over half a century's observation, study and experience. Yet little embodies no completion of his former books. It is Wholly a New Book. If 50 years ago he could produce a book that has had a sale of over fifteen hundred thousand copies, and has made his name familiar in nearly every English speaking home in the United States, Canada, and thousands of homes in Europe, Australia and South America, what KIND of a book could or would he produce as his CROWNING life Work, WITH MORE THAN THIRTY YEARS OF ADDITIONAL PRACTICE AND EXPERIENCE? The book itself answers the question, and is the most valuable production in the history of book publishing.

CAUTION! Unscrupulous and pirating publishers are attempting to copy this book by taking portions of it out and palming it off on the public as the complete work. CARRIER'S ADDRESS.

Another year is come and gone,
Away into the vast unknown;
And still the fair hours shining on
The just and the unjust.

And still the struggle—as of old,
With all its convoys manifold,
In but for Gold, Almighty Gold!
The universal lust.

And so long as the world doth run
Around the ever glorious Sun,
We'll keep you posted on what's done
Mid the contending throng.

For here in this, our Canada,
We are not governed by John A.,
He only holds divided sway
In this great realm of ours.

Nor does the Queen rule those domains,
Here Mrs. Grundy rules and reigns,
Inflicting penalties and pains
On all who disobey.

She rules the Camp, the Church and State,
For who can match her in debate,
Or who like her can wholly hate?
And she will have her way.

And under her gossiping rule
She makes a wise man seem a fool;
Of Mammon's self she made a tool,
For vainly would he bribe.

And her great power he has to own,
And humbly kneeling at her throne,
He scarce dare call his wealth his own,
Through terror he'll subscribe.

And now your Carrier doth pray,
You'll all be rescued from her sway,
And fortune's favors come your way,
And with you aye abide.

CHAPTER XIII.

THE RETURNED AUSTALIAN

The road toward Sandgate, along which they drive, gives them a series of magnificent views of the English Channel, now extraordinarily quiet under the autumn breeze, and bright with moving sailing vessels and dashing steamers, while scene is gilded by the setting sun.

The drive is only slightly over the mile, and Miss Potter and Arthur are in happy conversation as they turn to go into the lodge gates that mark the entrance to the pretty gardens that surround Lord Lincoln's marine villa most appropriately named "Channel View."

Upon these gates is seated a boy of about twelve, clothed in characteristic knickerbockers though he wears an Eton cap. He has great, frank eyes, light flaxen hair, and is a washed out masculine edition of Miss Ethel.

"Why, there's Teddy! Stop Arthur! here's Teddy!" cries his sister, as her youngest brother, the Honorable Teddy Lincoln, comes running to the carriage.

"I've been waiting for you an hour," says the boy.

"Why, Teddy, you never did that before," says Miss Ethel, kissing the boy who does not even look at her. "What a nice child!"

As the Honorable Teddy scans the party in the carriage, he gives them all a sensation, for the tears of unutterable disappointment are in his eyes as he says brokenly but savagely: "Where's Potter the Texan? I've been waiting to see him an hour. Crabbe, our butler, has been in town and says he's a curiosity!"

A silence falls upon the party, broken by Arthur trying to turn the thing off as a joke, and saying: "Well, Teddy, here's Mr Potter's daughter, you know her. Won't she do as well?"

"Do? How'll she do? She ain't been scalped, has she?" cries out the boy, firing a stone at a passing cur.

During the ride up the avenue Miss Potter says nothing, but there is a low giggling from Mr. Van Cott in the back seat that makes Arthur whip up the horses to drown his noise, though he would much sooner have turned the lash the other way. Two minutes after this they are all at home, and Ethel, in the library, sobbing on her father's knee, is whispering her confidences to the great lawyer about "her Charley," while Arthur is outside the door to prepare the governor for the coming of the paternal Potter.

Left alone, Errol's eyes follow his betrothed till she is out of sight, then his glance naturally turns the other way to look for his father's coming.

He thinks he will go down and meet him, and actually moves a few steps in that direction until, reflecting that there are a good many trains from London to Folkestone and he may have to wait for some time before the elder Errol arrives and even then miss him in the crowd, he concludes it will be best to make things comfortable for his father's reception and wait for him quietly at the West Cliff.

Consequently he returns to the hotel and stepping past Sergeant Brackett, who had become restless on seeing Errol more, but is now apparently deeply interested again in the adventures of Sampson the Sculper, he goes to the office, engages two of the best bedrooms in the house, and registering his father's name and his own, orders dinner. Then the young man makes himself comfortable with cigar and something drinkable before the fire, and goes into a state of somnolent happiness; every now and then waking up, and then waking up and going to the door of the hotel whenever he hears the sound of wheels.

His father has been always very dear and close to him as a boy, and since he has grown into a young man this feeling has still existed and they have shared confidences like brothers, as it would be good if more men dared do with their fathers and more daughters with their mothers. Pondering on this, Mr. Charley does not go to the door at the right time, and as he sits before the fire, a pair of hands are clapped over his eyes and a hearty, honest, manly voice says: "Guess who is in, my lad!" The next instant Charley Errol has sprung up with a cry knocking his chair over, and has his father in his arms.

"You're all right?" asks the Errol after the first gush of greeting is over, looking at his son rather anxiously. "No sound on a new sovereign," and Charley does a little playful athletics. Then he remarks, looking at his father rather critically: "And you're not aged by a minute—the same dear old father. Do you know at one time I hardly expected to see your face again!"

"Yes, I know—I—I would have come to you after that, but I received the news of your wounds by letter, and before the letter came a cablegram arrived stating you were out of all danger," replies Ralph Errol very seriously, and then says, patting his son on the shoulder quite proudly: "I'm glad to know my son did his duty in that awful time so nobly. The Australian papers made quite a hero of you. Lady Annesley whom you saved is, I believe, the daughter of a gentleman who was at one period of my life very kind to me. People say she is very beautiful. Is she the lady whom——"

Here Charley jumps at the opening he has been longing for, and fishing out a photograph of Miss Ethel's face, with which that young lady had favored him in Venice, pokes it under his father's nose.

"Humph! What is that?" says the old gentleman, wiping his glasses.

"That is the picture of the girl I love!"

"Well, if I'm to look at the picture of the girl you love, you'd better ring for lights. This sunset gives her eyes rather an unpleasant cast."

"Governor, you always did delight to chaff me," cries the son laughing, but at the same time instructing Lubbins to illuminate.

This being done, he takes the opportunity of scrutinizing his father as that gentleman criticises Miss Ethel's picture and is quite happy to see the old gentleman looking so well. For Ralph Errol has the bearing and culture of an educated gentleman, and is very much a man of the world, considering his long and continuous residence at the antipodes. He is probably ten years older than Mr. Potter, and is slightly bent by years, being nearly sixty and has the same jovial manner that his son remembers when last he saw him; though he notices with concern that his father's eyes have a restless, uneasy look, as if apprehensive of something or some one indefinite.

He has no time to note anything more before the old gentleman remarks: "So this is the one you telegraphed about. She is rather pretty!"

"Rather pretty?" retorts the son, in great scorn. "Rather pretty? Gover nor your eyes haven't been failing you lately?"

"No, they're as good as they were twenty years ago!" laughs the father, and then he adds dryly, inspecting the picture again: "She has a nice nose!"

"A nice nose!"

"Well hasn't she?" says Ralph with a chuckle.

"She has a nice nose. Nicer than any nose in Australia. By the by, how is Australia?"

"Oh, about the same as usual. Melbourne is a little bigger and a little richer—but I haven't had anything to eat since I left London!"

"I've thought of that," says the young man, and he rings the bell and orders: "Dinner at once!"

As this is being done, the elder is gazing from the window at his native land, turns to his son, muttering: "So this is home. Does a man ever forget the place of his birth? To-morrow I'll run over to see the house in which I was born. Fourteen hours ago I landed and had England. Now, Charley, I have you and England!" And there are tears in his eyes as Ralph Errol sits down opposite his boy and looks at him lovingly and proudly. After a moment he says, as if anxious to come to the subject: "Charley, who is the young lady?"

"The future Mrs. Errol!" says the young man, as if the title made him happy.

"I—I hope you haven't spoken to her," returns his father, hesitatingly.

"Oh, yes, I have!"

"But you received my cable?"

"Certainly, but had already asked her!"

"I'm sorry for that!"

"And why?" asks the son, anxiously.

"Because—because I believe in taking such important steps with deliberation." There is a hesitation that is almost embarrassment to the father's manner. "What is her name?"

"Why, I wrote you four pages about her!"

"The letter must have missed me at sea. Your telegram only called her the woman you loved. Who is she?"

This question is put so unusually that Charley replies: "You need not doubt the girl of my choice. Her father is one Lord Lincoln, and has lately been retired from his position on the bench."

"Judge Lincoln?" This with a gasp of astonishment. Then the father asks in apparent incredulity: "And he permitted his daughter to accept your suit?"

"Certainly. Why not? I speak to him to-morrow!"

"Oh, you haven't yet seen him?" the old man utters.

"No; but I have not the slightest doubt he will accept me, especially when he sees you!"

"You must not speak to him to-morrow!"

"And why, pray?"

"Because I—I came over here to get some business settled, and until that is done you must not see Judge Lincoln," returns the father, getting up and leaning his head over the mantel.

His tone is such that it alarms his son, and he cries: "Is anything wrong in money matters? Tell me, dear old governor, and I'm by your side!" And springing up he puts his arms caressingly over his father's shoulder.

"No, we are richer than ever!"

"Then I cannot understand you. Explain!" says Charley, turning away with a little anger in his tone.

But the old man mutters doggedly: "Let's have dinner. We'll talk the matter over to-morrow," and apparently would now put off the discussion.

"No! I'm too anxious to have an appetite. Please explain now!" says Charley, attempting a laugh.

"I cannot explain for a few days—for some little time!"

"Father, listen to me!" cries the son coming again to his side and speaking eagerly and excitedly. "I have given my word to ask for her to-morrow. Dear old governor, she'll think me a scoundrel!"

"Still you must not speak!"

"But father, why? If you are in trouble, I am your son. Tell me; surely I have a right to demand your reason when you ask me to do what must make the woman I love doubt my truth to her. Tell me, dear old governor, your reason!" and he would go on pleadingly.

But here his father turns his face to him and says hoarsely "I will!" and his face is such a one that the son trembles as he looks at it. "I have come all the way from Australia to tell you—I—I—" Here the poor old man gasps and his face flushes with shame and is contorted with woe.

But at this moment they are interrupted by the door opening, and looking toward the noise Charley sees Sergeant Brackett walk into the coffee-room, that has been empty to this moment, and lace his dog in a corner, as if to put the little creature out of the way of danger.

As he does this Ralph Errol is muttering to himself: "No! No! My heavens! Tell my own son—I can't do it!" and sinking into a chair, is beating his hands together as if in despair.

Advancing toward the two, the detective with a deprecatory bow says: "Beg pardon, gents. You'll excuse me, sir, but I was directed to do this business polite. One of you is Mr. Ralph Errol just from Australia. My name is Brackett, sergeant at Scotland Yard!"

"Scotland Yard!" This is a cry, and Ralph, pale as a ghost, springs up and gasps: "You—you come to——"

"Father, you have been robbed on shipboard I suppose," says the son, "I'll attend to the matter." And then, seeing his father staggering, runs to him and says: "You are faint. By George! I should not have let you fast so long."

But Mr. Brackett continues in a dogged sort of way as if he didn't half like the job: "I have a warrant and extractions from the Home Office to arrest Ralph Errol!"

"Arrest my—my father!" cries Charley; then he bursts out and laughs: "You are crazy! He's the foremost man in Melbourne!"

To this Mr. Brackett says nothing, but is producing a document, when Ralph is between the officer and his son begging, pleading, crying: "Don't tell him! He is my son! In mercy don't tell HIM!"

But Brackett, having a heart, doesn't trust himself to look at him, and says sharply: "As a returned convict!"

"A returned convict!" shrieks the son. "My father? Speak! Tell him he lies!" but not waiting for an answer he hissis: "You insulting scoundrel! you dare to say this of my dear old governor? I'll——"

And he would do even more than he threatens, for his arm is upraised in his father's cause, when that father staggers to him, and takes the power out of his body and soul by muttering in a broken voice: "Stay! The man only does his duty and—tells you what I have never dared to tell you, that your father is a ticket-of-leave-man sentenced to transportation for life, forbidden to return to his native land for the crime of burglary and theft!" and stands trembling and wringing his hands and bowing his head before his son.

With these words the world seems to change to Charley Errol, and no more be the bright place he used to think it; but looking on his face, from which a pair of bloodshot eyes are imploring one word from him to help him bear the shame and agony of the moment, something dies into the man's child and he gives his father hope and consolation, for he cries fiercely: "BUT INNOCENT!"

"You believe it! Thank God!" and Ralph Errol is sobbing in Charley's arms.

"I know it, dear old governor! Your son, who knows and loves you, couldn't believe you a thief!" answers the young man.

"I am a martyr to circumstantial evidence," mutters the father. "Other men have sold this and lied, but I say it, and it's the living truth, as I hope to see your mother in heaven!" Then looking into his boy's eyes, Ralph Errol once more stands erect, and Sergeant Brackett, who has drawn back a little from the interview, sees rather dimly—for the old man's awful shame has brought the tears to the detective's eyes—that there is from now on no shrinking in the father's look, and that his only fear has been his son would think him guilty.

After a moment the elder Errol continues, with grave dignity, speaking straight at his boy as if he knew he had little time to lose, for Sergeant Brackett is looking uneasily at his watch: "Several times in my life I have tried to tell you, but it—it was too humiliating to confess to my son that the laws of my country had made me an outcast and a felon, and branded me the convict and the thief."

Here the son, who has become steadied by his father's manner, returns: "But something, some one must be able to prove you innocent!"

"Only one man can, and I came over to find him, but now shall not be permitted," replies Ralph sadly. "But he has never been seen since that night he may have been the guilty party himself."

"His name?"

"Look at the advertisements in the London Times since 1856 to to-day, also in those of the New York Herald since 1866, and you will often find the name of the office boy of Jeffey & Stevens—Sammy Potts!"

"Sammy Potts! that's the man you want to find—Sammy Potts, I'll remember that!" mutters the son.

But here Mr. Brackett stops further conversation by saying: "Beg pardon, gents, but the night boat is about to leave for France. You can see my warrant," and shows them a document bearing her majesty's seal, which seems to Charley a great blur save the words: Ralph Errol ticket of leave man No. 29, 341.

These make him desperate, for they bring the truth to him, and turn it into his brain, that HE IS A CONVICT SON.

"Your instructions!" gasps Ralph.

"Was to be very polite," returns Brackett, who knows that the person of his warrant is, though a felon, a man of consideration in the colonies, "but to see you left England to night."

"I am at your service," says the ex-convict; and supported by Charley he staggers out of the hotel, looking ten years older than when he entered it an hour ago. And so they come down to the pier, where the Channel steamboat is ready, waiting for the London train.

"You are coming with me?" says the old man to his son.

"No; I stay here to prove your innocence. You were poor when convicted—we are rich now, and I'll buy the truth from somebody!" returns Charley Errol who becomes firmest in despair; for his bearing and manner now are the same as they were during that last night in Egypt. Then he goes on to the detective. "You have five minutes yet! Answer my questions! Wasn't it curious the Home Office should know so immediately of my father's arrival?"

Mr. Brackett suggests that information has probably been furnished.

"Ah!" cries the young man, "by some one who is afraid, father, of your being here; who dare not let you live in England. Perhaps the thief himself!" and Brackett is startled with this idea he ceases to Bra "You are a detective to prove innocently, help me to prove one innocent. Here are your expenses! Do your duty; then find and report to me what I dread the information at the Home Office that drives my dear injured father again out of England!"

"Where shall I report to you?" asks Brackett eagerly, for he has filled the detective's hands with gold.

"Here at the West Cliff Hotel to-morrow."

"All right; but we must get on board!"

And Charley supporting Ralph to the steamer, which is now receiving its crowd from the train, the old man whispers: "Oh, my boy, if I could have seen my birth-place; but when I pass that gangway I leave my country forever—and you—my disgrace falls on you!"

Then his son feels a tear drop on his face that makes him desperate. He turns: "Father, you shall come back back to England no more a ticket-of-leave man, but honored and respected by the world who drove you from it! I swear it!" Next he says hurriedly, for Brackett is pressing them off, the gap way: "Who can give me the details of your trial?"

"It was over thirty years ago. My lawyer is dead."

"Then to what living man who is just and knows can I apply?"

"To the Judge who tried and sentenced me!"

"His name?" cries out the son, for the crowd has forced him from his father, and back upon the pier, but Ralph Errol hesitates and does not answer.

"His name?" shrieks out the son desperately, the gangway is being drawn up, the signal bell is ringing, and the boat is steaming away into the night for France; then out of the darkness floating upon the and spinds of the sea, comes his father's voice and strikes like each despair, for it answers: "PERCY LINCOLN!"

And the young man cries: "My God, MY FATHER! How shall I tell HER?"

Cures Wrought Without Miracles.

We are told that miracles have ceased. Possibly they may have been discontinued in order to give full scope to human intelligence. Certain it is that the wonderful developments and achievements of science in these latter days have rendered direct supernatural interposition in human affairs unnecessary. This is especially true of the improvements in medical science. Two thousand years ago Thomas Holloway would probably have been deemed a worker of miracles. The cures effected by his Pills and Ointment would have been considered supernatural. Even now they are looked upon as marvels; yet we know that the medicines which have healed the sick in all parts of the world are the legitimate fruits of profound thought, unwearied study and research, and a long series of practical experiments. It is a singular fact, and one that establishes beyond question Holloway's theory of a common origin, that the people of every country into which his medicaments have been introduced have considered them specially adapted to the complaints most common in such country. The reason is that they operate upon the deleterious principle in the blood of the patient, which is the immediate cause of his disorder, what ever it may be, and hence their effect is always salutary. In Canada every settler on new land who has ever tried them in intermittent or bilious remittent fever will aver that there are no diseases in which they work such wonders as in these. The Canadians also are impressed with the belief that the cutaneous and glandular disorders to which violent extremes of heat and cold render them peculiarly subject, are more readily eradicated by the Ointment than any other diseases for which it is prescribed. It is in evidence, however, that just what these great remedies are doing for Canada they are doing for all nations under the sun. It so happens indeed that the ailments upon which the preparations exhibit the most direct and powerful influence are precisely those which are the chief scourges of British America, and hence they seem to be, and in one sense are, more especially required in that region than in some other countries. But their unbounded celebrity, and the enormous increase of the demand for them in all our colonies indicate their value more eloquently than any eulogium that we could bestow. Within a few years they have become staples of the medical market throughout North America. The constant inquiry for them renders it inexpedient for any drug house or apothecary's shop to be without them, and druggists who does not keep them makes, in effect, a tacit admission that he is unacquainted with the wants of his customers. His stock is not merely incomplete; it lacks two essential articles which the sick must and will have from some source or other.

Such popularity as this is the seed only of superlative excellence, and it places the superiority of Holloway's Remedies beyond all controversy.—The Electioneer.

IT SHINES FOR ALL.
ORANGEVILLE, JAN. 3, 1889.

THE MAYORALTY.

When the Post attempts to convey to the public the idea that THE SUN was opposed to the return of Mayor Gilchrist for a second term it deliberately and maliciously lies. We were candid in our opinion of Mr. Gilchrist's administration last week, and we pointed out the injustice being done the ratepayers by the inconsistent course of that gentleman. Now that Mayor Gilchrist has been returned by acclamation, however, we can safely say, without fear of being termed shameless-like in our tendencies, that we are in hearty accord with the action of the electors in this respect. Having expressed his desire to represent the people for a second term, we believe the ratepayers have acted wisely in gratifying that wish when no serious charge of incompetency can be attributed to him during his first term of office. As chief magistrate of the town Mr. Gilchrist has invariably advanced the best interests of the people, and the ratepayers, we feel confident, will have no reason to regret his return for a second term.

THE REEVESHIP.

The most pleasing feature of the nominations on Monday was the re-election of Reeve Foster by acclamation. There are few men in Orangeville today more universally respected than Mr. Foster. His course at the council boards of both the town and county has been marked by a policy of unimpeachable honesty; he has been open and above board in all his dealings, and by his assistance and influence has done much to place Orangeville in the proud position it occupies as a town to day. It is, therefore, no wonder that Mr. Foster is a popular man with the electors of Orangeville, and the compliment paid him by his return without opposition for another term was well merited. Mr. Foster takes his seat as reeve for 1889 with the assurance that the ratepayers have every confidence that he will not abuse the trust imposed upon him.

THE DEPUTY-REEVESHIP.

THE SUN's candidate for the office of deputy-reeve for 1889 is Mr. John Kearns. During the past quarter of a century THE SUN has carefully watched the course pursued by that gentleman, both in public and private, and we have no hesitation in saying that he is entitled to the fullest confidence and support of the electors. His course, during the four years in which he served the people in the capacity of councillor, was characterized by common-sense and discretion, and his opponents cannot point to a single instance in which he betrayed the confidence of those who elected him to office. Mr. Endacott's supporters, on the other hand, claim for that gentleman a similarly good record, and THE SUN would be very sorry indeed to utter a single word to injure his prospects or lower him in the estimation of the people. We favor the election of Mr. Kearns because of his long residence in the town, his marked ability and clean record as the people's representative, and for his fearless stand on the market and the cow by-law issues. He has been a hearty and consistent supporter of the market scheme, and has not stooped to underhand dealing in order to frustrate the attempts of the people to build up a prosperous and successful home market. He has always advanced, so far as lay in his power, the interests of the poor and heavily taxed ratepayer, and it will be nothing short of base ingratitude if Mr. Kearns is not returned at the head of the poll when the ballots are counted on Monday night.

MONO AND AMARANTH.

The contests in Mono and Amaranth promise to prove close and exciting. Messrs. Allen and Irwin, the candidates for the Mono reeveship, are canvassing with increased vigor. They are both good men, and the township will find a worthy representative in either. The 1st deputy-reeveship will be the subject of a close fight between Messrs. Island and Piggott, while the contest between Messrs. Atkinson, McBrien and Dynes for the 2nd deputy reeveship is exciting even greater interest. The candidates for councillors are Messrs. Still, Brett and Reid. The two former are deserving of election. In Amaranth the struggle for the reeveship will be confined to Messrs. Braiden and McMichael. The former is a young man of considerable municipal experience, and the township will best serve its own interests by returning Mr. Braiden. Messrs. Johnston and Large will contest the deputy-reeveship, the former's chances of election being very good. The old councillors, Messrs. Durkin, Hamilton and McVanel, should also be returned for another term.

THE TRUE DEMOCRAT.—Oscar and the Imperial Roxy Prince with Puck & Foreman's Uncle Tom's Cabin, Town Hall, Jan. 16th.

THE WARD CONTESTS.

The contests in the various Wards this year promise to prove exceedingly close and exciting. In the Ninth for candidates in the field are Messrs. Fox, Youmans and Ketchum. Mr. Fox has served the ratepayers faithfully and deserves re-election. Between Messrs. Youmans and Ketchum, however, the ratepayers will have some difficulty in making a selection. Mr. Youmans has claims upon the ratepayers which should not be overlooked, and, we believe, is entitled to the confidence of the electors. He is a hard and indefatigable worker in municipal affairs, and would do honor to any Ward. In the South the aspirants are Messrs. May, King and Pinkney. THE SUN has nothing in common with Mr. May, and we hope the electors of the South Ward will have the good taste to elect him to stay at home. Mr. Pinkney is a warm supporter of the present cow by-law and as such is entitled to the support of the ratepayers. Mr. King would also make a good councillor. The East will be the battleground of a hard fight. There are five candidates in the field—Messrs. Hulse, Cobean, Paisley, Bailey and Reid. Mr. Hulse, it is scarcely necessary for us to say, is entitled to re-election. He has been a careful and painstaking representative and as chairman of the R. & B. Committee has saved the town hundreds of dollars. Messrs. Cobean and Paisley are young men of push and enterprise who would do credit to the Ward, while Mr. Bailey is also well qualified to occupy a seat at the council board. Between Messrs. Lindsey, Walsh and Gillespie, the three candidates for the West Ward, the electors should have no hesitation in selecting the two first mentioned gentlemen. Messrs. Lindsey and Walsh are men of more than ordinary ability, and will undoubtedly be returned at the head of the poll in the West.

FOR SCHOOL TRUSTEES.

Messrs. Bennett, Ewing and Marshall are the candidates for election to the position of Public School trustee for the North Ward, Mr. Bennett, who has the advantage of an extended experience as a member of the board, is, we think, entitled to the preference. In the East the aspirants are Messrs. John Witter and Jos. H. Hughes, and the former will, in all probability, be returned. The candidates in the South are Messrs. Henry Savage and John Bailey. Mr. Savage is the most popular candidate of the two, and will likely secure the seat.

VOTE FOR THE BY-LAW.

THE SUN is unconditionally opposed to the present uncalled for attempt to shut up the cows altogether. We believe the by-law now in force meets, to all intents and purposes, the wishes of the ratepayers, and we trust that the electors will show by their votes on Monday that they do not countenance the attempt being made by a few schemers to create trouble and discord. Mark your ballot as follows:

Shall Cows be prohibited from running at large altogether?

Shall Cows be allowed to run at large as provided by the present By-law? X

EDITORIAL NOTES.

AFTER all it seems the Imperial Government has appointed a commission to move in the Crofter emigration matter. Canada is to be the destination of the assisted families. The High Commissioner and one other Canadian gentleman are to share in the work of supervision. This should ensure that the Government's action is not taken advantage of by unauthorized persons. As for the crofters themselves, we cannot well have too many of them. They are a people whose predecessors in colonization have done an immense amount to the building up of Canada, and, who, wherever they have settled, have fully held their own in the competition for wealth and progress. They are welcome.

A strange case is attracting a great deal of attention in the Inland revenue department at Ottawa just now. A short time ago a prominent officer in an Ontario town was found to be short in his accounts. He is a gentleman of high standing in his community and his friends repudiated as indignantly as he did any wrong doing. Still his stamp accounts would not balance. There was a considerable amount charged to him for which he could produce neither money nor stamps. Another officer was temporarily put in his place and an investigation held, but nothing discovered. The office was systematically searched but no stamps could be found. At last the investigation was closed and the officer who made it prepared to report to the department. That night the suspected man had a dream, in which he found all the missing stamps in an old corner of the office, where they evidently been pushed by someone unintentionally, and where they might have been undiscovered for years. The first thing next morning he hotfoot for his office and there sure enough, in the place where he had seen them in his dream, were found the missing stamps, which make his accounts correct. Of course he was quickly reinstated, and will no doubt be henceforth a strong believer in dreams.

PRESENTATION.—The employes of Messrs. Endacott Bros.' presented Mr. T. J. Wilkins, their late foreman—who has severed his connection with the firm to fill the position of traveller for Stewart, Son & Co., Hamilton—with a handsome silver salt on New Year's eve. Mrs. Wilkins was also made the recipient of a similar present.

MISS SCANLAN HEARD FROM.—Miss Annie Scanlan writes as follows: "I saw a paragraph in the Post some time ago stating that Miss Annie Austin had been appointed organist in St. Peter's church. If such appointment was made I invite Miss Austin to take my place, and if she doesn't the people will know the reason why, as she cannot play."

BOARDING HOUSE.—Henry King, late of Walkerton, has rented the large brick dwelling house known as the "Leslie Castle," on Broadway, opposite the Public School, for the purpose of keeping a boarding house. Any parties desirous of obtaining good accommodation should apply at once. Comfortable rooms and first class board.—HENRY KING.

ANOTHER BLAZE.—A vacant house in the North Ward, lately occupied by Wm. Taylor, was the cause of the clanging of the fire alarm at 2 o'clock on Saturday morning. The firemen who answered the call found the burning building to be beyond the reach of the hose. The house was a frame one and was entirely consumed, but an adjoining dwelling was saved. The loss is covered by insurance.

UNCLE TOM'S CABIN.—Probably no drama or modern times has been as successful as Uncle Tom's Cabin, and when performed by a competent company the beautiful story is brought out with telling effect. No better descriptive matter has ever been written (in the opinion of the best critics) and, thoughtfold, the play is interesting even to those who have seen it many times. Peck & Foreman's Company give the best performance ever witnessed and are highly recommended by press and public wherever they have performed. This company will play in the town hall, Orangeville, Thursday, Jan. 10th.

LAUREL CHEESE FACTORY.—Secretary-Treasurer Varcoe furnishes us with the following figures in connection with the third sale of cheese, from 1st to 29th Sept., 1888, at the Laurel factory: Aggregate quantity of milk manufactured, 50,622 lbs.; cheese, 5,122 lbs.; cheese averaged 10c. per lb., and realized $512.25; the expenses of manufacturing and selling totalled $168.05, leaving a balance of $444.20 to the credit of patrons. It required nearly 9-9 10 lbs. of milk to produce 1 lb. of cheese, and the amount to patrons per cwt. of milk was a fraction over 73c.

MONEY IN BUTTER MAKING.—There's money in butter making, according to the Peterboro' Times, which proceeds to tell how Mrs. John L. Telford of Ennismore kept an account during the past summer of the profits accruing from six cows up to Aug. 15, and seven from that time till the end of November. Besides keeping a family of seven, a hired man and a servant girl, and having a daily supply and sufficient to do over the coming winter, she has netted $150.44, and raised four calves, which average to value $4 each, making a total of $166.44. The number of pounds of butter sold was 705.

An explosion of giant powder, on Saturday, blew a cabin, on the outskirts of the town of Papalloy, W. T., to pieces. James Biggs was killed, and Leroy Gow was badly injured. The Essex Centre Liberal says:—"A great ado is made in Windsor over the fact that a lady there had been subjected to the indignity of being searched for smuggled goods. The search was, however, justified by the finding. Had it been a poor woman who smuggled a few articles that could be bought cheaper, for the sake of supporting her family, there would have been nothing said, although there might have been some justification for her conduct; but when the offender happens to be rich, and one who could well afford to pay the duties, then the act of searching is infamous."

The weather in Europe is so extraordinary both in London and Paris, that the very oldest inhabitant creates no excitement because everybody knows perfectly well that he has never seen anything like it. The temperature has been practically what it was last July and this is destined to be known to future generations as the flowery Christmas. In London flowers are blooming in every direction, and in Paris the Boulevard cafe sidewalks are crowded with Frenchmen sipping their absinthes and enjoying the warm air and sunshine. Bare legged children are disporting themselves in the Tuileries gardens, where the French nurses and firemen still carry on mild flirtations that usually end with October.

They were caught in a dense fog and apparently surprised by the returns, and in the afternoon Captain Tyler attacked them. The battle raged for several hours, over one hundred being fired from the police boat and a great many from the boats of the oyster thieves. An unknown dredger was shot through and through and the boats were badly riddled with bullets, though no serious damage was done. The pirates were finally put to flight. ## Poetry.

I WOULDNA GIE,

I wouldna gie a copper penie
For ony man that lives his life
Just duty clear;
I wouldna praise his deed or name,
I wouldna trust him for a crime,
Nor lift an ear to ony lame
That he might steer.

When things are just as things should be,
And fortune gives a man a place,
Wherever he be,
It isna hard to understand
How he may walk through honor and fame
Wi' pleasin' face and open hand
Continually.

But when, 'mid strife and care,
A man must bear and failure bear,
His merits praise
Who will not to misfortune bow,
Who cocks his bonnet on his brow,
And fights and fights, he hears no how,
Through long, hard days.

I wouldna gie an auld bawbee
For ony man that I could see
What claims hold
The sweetness o'er his mither's name,
The kindness o'er his brother's claim,
The honor o' a woman's fame,
Nor mair than gold.

But gie him praise, where love is pain,
Who wronged forgives and loves again,
And though he grieves,
Lets not the dear one from his care,
But loves her mair, and mair, and mair,
And bides his time wi' hope and prayer,
And still believes.

THE WAY OF THE WORLD.

This world is very funny,
For no matter how much money
Man is earning he will spend it, and be hard up all the time;
To his utmost he is straining
To catch up without attaining,
Till he makes his life a burden, when it should be bliss sublime.

He who earns five hundred merely,
Thinks one thousand dollars yearly
Would be just the figure to make happiness complete;
But his income, when it doubles,
Only multiplies his troubles,
For his outgo then increasing makes his both ends worse to meet

It is run in debt and borrow,
Flush to-day and broke to-morrow,
Financiering every way to postpone the day of doom;
Spending money gro he makes it,
And then wondering what takes it,
Till he, giving up the riddle, looks for rest within the tomb.

Oh, this world is very funny
To the average man whose money
Doesn't quite pay for the dancing that he does before he should;
And he kills himself by trying
Just a little higher flying

ROLLOWAY'S OINTMENT.—Sores, wounds, abscesses and other diseases affecting the skin are amenable to this healing and healing unguent. It has called forth the loudest praise from persons who have suffered for years from bad legs, abscesses and chronic ulcers, after every hope of cure had long passed away. None but those who have experienced the soothing effect of this ointment can form an idea of the comfort it bestows, by removing inflammation and allaying pain. Wherever this Ointment has been once used it has established its superiority, and has again been eagerly sought for as the easiest and safest remedy for all vexatious complaints. In neuralgia, rheumatism and gout the same application, properly used, gives wonderful relief.

We won't oblige, Mr. Sun, plug on Bun Year's Day, will not be visible in this country. The sun will not be eclipsed in Canada. It will be an evening, however, for the Alaskan islanders, and there they will have a rare opportunity for a bath, for it will be dark with them all day running. From that point on the surface of the earth the image of the centre of the eclipse will sweep eastward and eastward across the Pacific Ocean, and will land on the western shores of America to the north of San Francisco. Across Nevada, Idaho and Montana the line will fall till it sets away up in Canada.

A large hot water range in the kitchen of Mr. Stanley Williams' residence, on Queen's avenue, exploded with a terrific report a few minutes before noon Saturday smashing the stove into a hundred pieces, and sending them flying in every direction about the building. The shock knocked all the plaster off the ceiling in both the kitchen and dining-room, and set fire to the partition. An alarm was sounded from box 5, and the brigade responded, but only found it necessary to use buckets to extinguish the flames. Last night water was left in the pipes which had frozen before morning, and when a fire was lit it caused the explosion. Fortunately no one was injured although a domestic was in the kitchen at the time. This ought to prove a salutary warning to other parties using these ranges.—London Free Press.

Prof. Goldwin Smith, as president of the Commercial Union Club, assures the public in a recent letter, that Mr. Butterworth's annexation resolutions were a surprise both to him and Mr. Wiman. We can well believe Mr. Smith. It was not the game of Commercial Unionists that their American ally should disclose the plot so openly, and they are bound, for self preservation, to now disclaim all sympathy with one to whom they have so long pointed with pride as the leader of the movement in the United States. What the people of Canada are chiefly concerned about, however, is not Mr. Wiman's nor Mr. Smith's opinion, but the view American public men take of the project, and that they learn from the frank declaration of Mr. Butterworth that his aim is annexation.—Montreal Gazette.

Jenks' Dream.

Jenks had a queer dream the other night. He thought he saw a prize-fighters' ring, and in the middle of it stood a doughty little champion who met and deliberately knocked over, one by one, a score or more of big burly-looking fellows, as they advanced to the attack. Giants as they were in size, the valiant pigmy proved more than a match for them. It was all so funny that Jenks woke up laughing. He accounts for the dream by the fact that he had just come to the conclusion, after trying nearly every big drastic pill on the market, that Pierce's tiny Purgative Pellets easily knock out and beat all the rest hollow!

On the Verge of Starvation.

"For three months I could not eat a full meal or do a day's work. I bought a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, began using it, and in three days my appetite returned, in a week I felt like a new man. It was wonderful what that one bottle did for me," writes Arthur Allchin, of Huntsville, Muskoka, who suffered from dyspepsia.

She is crossing the parlor, the maiden fair
Crossing the room with unconscious air,
She halts, but of course she does not know,
She has halted under the mistletoe.
Not till she's kissed is the maid aware
That she halted under the mistletoe there.
How many strange things in the world we see;
How absent-minded a maid can be!

A Cure for Deafness.

There have been many remarkable cures of deafness made by the use of Hagyard's Yellow Oil, the great household remedy for pain, inflammation and soreness. Yellow Oil cures rheumatism, sore throat and croup and is useful internally and externally for all pains and injuries.

Presence of Mind.

Luxuriant Hair

can only be produced by keeping the scalp clean, cool, and free from dandruff, and the hair in a healthy condition. The great popularity of Ayer's Hair Vigor is due to the fact that it cleanses the scalp, promotes the growth of the hair, prevents it from falling out, and gives it that soft and silky gloss so essential to perfect beauty.

Frederick Hardy, of Roxbury, Mass., a gentleman fifty years of age, was fast losing his hair, and what remained was growing gray. After trying various dressings with no effect, he commenced the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. "It stopped the falling out," he writes; "and, to my great surprise, converted my white hair (without staining the scalp) to the same shade of brown it had when I was 25 years of age."

Ten Years Younger.

Mrs. Mary Montgomery, of Boston, writes: "For years, I was compelled to wear a dress cap to conceal a bald spot on the crown of my head; but now I gladly lay the cap aside, for your Hair Vigor is bringing out a new growth. I could hardly trust my senses when I first found my hair growing; but there it is, and I am delighted. I look ten years younger."

A similar result attended the use of Ayer's Hair Vigor by Mrs. O. O. Prescott, of Charlestown, Mass., Miss Rosie H. Bedloe, of Burlington, Vt., Mrs. J. J. Burton, of Bangor, Me., and numerous others.

The loss of hair may be owing to impurity of the blood, or derangement of the stomach and liver, in which case, a course of Ayer's Sarsaparilla or of Ayer's Pills, in connection with the Vigor, may be necessary to give health and tone to all the functions of the body. At the same time, it cannot be too strongly urged that none of these remedies can do much good without a persevering trial and strict attention to cleanly and temperate habits.

$500 REWARD is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of Chronic Nasal Catarrh which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflamed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness, hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scales from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. Only a few of the above-named symptoms are likely to be present in any one case. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption, and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood by physicians. By its mild, soothing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy cures the worst cases of Catarrh, "cold in the head," Coryza, and Catarrhal Headache. Sold by druggists everywhere; 50 cents.

"Untold Agony from Chnrrh."

Prof. W. HAUENER, the famous mesmerist, of Hanco, N. Y., writes: "Some ten years ago I suffered untold agony from chronic nasal catarrh. My family physician gave me up as incurable, and said I must die. My case was such a bad one, that every day, towards sunset, my voice would become so hoarse I could barely speak above a whisper. In the morning my coughing and clearing of my throat would almost strangle me. By the use of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, in three months, I was a well man, and the cure has been permanent."

"Constantly Hawking and Spitting."

THOMAS J. REMINGTON, Esq., 802 Pine Street, St. Louis, Mo., writes: "I was a great sufferer from catarrh for three years. At times I could hardly breathe, and was constantly hawking and spitting, and for the last eight months could not breathe through the nostrils. I thought nothing could be done for me. Luckily, I was advised to try Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, and I am now a well man. I believe it to be the only sure remedy for catarrh now manufactured, and one has only to give it a fair trial to experience astounding results and a permanent cure."

Three Bottles Cure Catarrh.

ELI ROBBINS, Bumpus P. O., Columbia Co., Pa., says: "My daughter had catarrh when she was five years old, very badly. I saw Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy advertised, and procured a bottle for her, and soon saw that it helped her; a third bottle effected a permanent cure. She is now eighteen years old and sound and hearty."

And wholly gone from earth away;
Alas! with all the great deeds done,
And high, heroic battles won,
Beholdth the everlasting Sun!

Unclothed as creation's hub,
It moved amid the wild hebeb,
And smiled at all the rub-a-dub,

And yet ranged over all the earth,
To note each scientific birth,
And everything of moral worth—

All the sad history of crime,
And all the deadful moral slime,
Thrown up upon the waves of time.

How Fortune mixes smiles and frowns
In all the mortal ups and downs,
In the great battle of the browns!

And also how the tear of Want
Doth now so many heartstrings haunt,
Or stitch with her fashioned gaunt;

And mixes up with all our joy,
That one distracting, wild alloy
That peace and happiness destroy;

For she's the demon of our age,
That keepeth now both saint and sage
For an interminable age.

Ay, even where Tax Sey doth shine,
The demon there will sit and pine,
Her to our words her ear incline.

But why should any mortal fear?
With Hope, and with a conscience clear,
We'll welcome in the glad New Year.

And now once more, my Patrons dear,
I wish you all with heart sincere,
Another happy, glad New Year!

THE MILL MYSTERY.

CHAPTER XIII.

GUY POLLARD.

THERE was a silence, then Dwight Pollard spoke again. "I have made a confession which I never expected to hear pass my lips. She who has forced it from me doubtless knows how much and how little it means. Let her explain herself, then. I have no further business in this place." And, without lifting his head or meeting the eye of either of us, he strode past us towards the door.

But there he paused, for Rhoda Colwell's voice had risen in words that must be answered.

"And where, then, have you business if not here? Do you not know I hold your good name, if not your life, in my hands?"

"My good name," he slowly rejoined, without turning his head, "is already lost in the eyes I most valued. As for my life, it stands in no jeopardy. Would I could say the same for his!" was his fierce addition.

"His came from Rhoda Colwell's lips in surprise. "His?" and with a quick and subtle movement she glided to his side and seized him imperatively by the arm. "Whom do you mean?" she asked.

He turned on her with a dark look. "Whom do I mean?" he retorted. "Whom should I mean but the base and unnatural wretch who, for purposes of his own, has made you the arbitrator of my destiny and the avenger of my sin—my brother, my vile, wicked brother, whom may Heaven——

"Stop! Your brother has had nothing to do with this. Do you suppose I would stoop to take information from him? What I know I know because my eyes have seen it, Dwight Pollard! And now what do you think of the clutch I hold upon your life?" and she held out those two milk-white hands of hers with a smile such as I hope never to see on mortal face again.

He looked at them, then at her, and drew back speechless. She burst into a low but ringing laugh of immeasurable triumph.

And you thought such a blow as this could come from a man! Dullard and fool you must be, Dwight Pollard, or else you have never known me. Why should he risk his honor and his safety in an action as dangerous to him as ungrateful to you? Because he admires her? Guy Pollard is not so loving. But I—I whom you taught to be a woman, only to fling aside like a weed—Ah, that is another thing! Reason for waiting and watching here; reason for denouncing, when the time came, the man who could take advantage of another man's fears! Ah! you see what I am talking about."

"Speak!" he gasped. "How do you know? You saw you saw. How could you see? Where were you, demon and witch in one?"

She smiled, not as before, but yet with a sense of power that only the evil glitter of her sidelong eye kept from making her wholly adorable.

"Will you come into the cellar below?" said she. "Or stay; that may be asking too much. A glance from one felt can see where black walls intervene; how much more when merely a flattering screen like that shuts off the view." And, drawing back, she looked into his dazed face, aimed then into mine, as though she would ask: "Have I convinced you that I am a woman to be feared?"

His white cheek seemed to answer Yes, but his eyes, when he raised them, did not quail before her mocking glance, though I thought they drooped a little when, in another moment, they flashed to my direction.

"Miss Sterling," he inquired, "do you understand what Miss Colwell has been saying?"

I shook my head and faltered back. I had only one wish; and that was to be effaced from this spot of misery.

He turned again to her.

"Do you intend to explain yourself further?" he demanded.

She did not answer; her look and attitude were fixed upon me.

"You are not quite convinced he is all that I declared him to be?" she said moving towards me. "You want to know what I saw and whether there is not some loophole by which you can escape from utterly condemning him. Well, you shall have my story. I ask nothing more of you than that." And with a quiet ignoring of his presence that was full of contempt, she drew up to my side and calmly began: "You have seen me in the streets in the garb of my brother?"

"Your brother?" cried a startled voice.

It was Dwight Pollard who spoke. He had sprung to her side and grasped her by the wrist. It was a picture; all the more that neither of them said any thing further, but stood so, surveying each other, till he thought fit to drop her arm and draw back, when she quiet as ever and as though no interruption had occurred.

"It was a convenient disguise, enabling me to do and learn many things. It also made it possible for me to be out in the evening alone, and allowed me to visit certain places where otherwise I have been anything but welcome. It also satisfied a spirit of adventure which I possess, and led to the experience which I am now about to relate. Miss Sterling, my brother has one peculiarity. He can be instructed to carry a message, and forget it ten minutes after it is delivered. This being generally known in town, I was not at all surprised when one evening, as I was traversing a very dark street, I was met and accosted by a muffled figure, who asked me if I would run to Mr. Barrows' house for him. I was about to say No, when something in his general air and manner deterred me, and I changed it into the half-laughing, half-eager assent which my brother uses on such occasions. The man immediately stooped to my ear and whispered:

"Tell Mr. Barrows to come with all speed to the old mill. A man has been thrown from his carriage and is dying there. He wants Mr. Barrows' prayers and consolation. Can you remember?"

"I nodded my head and ran off. I was fearful, if I stayed I would betray myself; for the voice, with all its attempted disguise, was that of Guy Pollard, and the man injured might for all I knew be his brother. Before I reached Mr. Barrows' door, however, I began to have my doubts. Something in the man's manner betrayed mystery, and as Guy Pollard had never before been a favorite of mine, I naturally gave to this anything but a favorable interpretation. I did not stop, though, because I doubted. On the contrary, I pressed forward, for if there was a secret, I must know it; and how could I learn it so readily or so well as by following Mr. Barrows on his errand of mercy?

"The person who came to the door in answer to my summons was fortunately Mr. Barrows himself; fortunately for me, that is; I cannot say it was altogether fortunately for him. He had a little book in his hand, and seemed disturbed when I gave him my message. He did not hesitate, however. Being of an unsuspicious nature, he never dreamed that all was not as I said, especially as he knew my brother well, and was thoroughly acquainted with the exactness with which he always executed an errand. But he did not want to go, that I saw clearly, and laid it all to the little book; for he was the kindest man who ever lived, and never was known to shrink a duty because it was unpleasant or hard.

"I have said he knew my brother well. Remembering this when he came down stairs again ready to accompany me, I assumed the mildest manner in which my brother ever indulged, that I might have some excuse for not remaining at saw the slight figure that crouched against the wall close by the door they had to enter. And if they had seen it, what would they have thought? Thus the idiot boy was only more freakish than usual, as he stood waiting about for the dime which was the usual pay for his services. Neither the clouds, nor the trees, nor the surrounding darkness would have whispered that an eager woman's heart beat under that boy's jacket, and that they had better treat the wind in its sweep, the water in its rush, or the fire in its ravaging, than the wild that lay coiled behind the feebly moving lip and wandering, restless eye of the seeming idiot who knelt there.

"So I was safe and for the moment could hear and see. And this what I saw: A tall and gentlemanly form, carrying a lantern which he took pains should shine on Mr. Barrows' face and not his own. The expression of the former was, therefore, plain to me, and in it I read something more than resistance, something which I dimly felt to be fear. His anxiety, however, did not seem to spring from his companion but from the building he was about to enter, for it was when he looked up at its frowning walls and shadowy portal that I saw him shudder and turn pale. They went in, however. Not without a question or two from Mr. Barrows as to whom his guide was and where the sick man lay, to all of which the other responded shortly or failed to respond at all, facts which went far to convince me that a deception of some kind was being practiced upon the confiding clergyman.

"I was consequently in a fever of impatience to follow them in, and had at last made up my mind to do so, when I heard a deep sigh, and glancing up towards the doorway, saw that it was again occupied by the dark figure which I had so lately seen pass in with Mr. Barrows. He had no lantern now, and I could not even discern the full outlines of his form but his sigh being repeated, I knew who he was as certainly as if I had seen him, for it was one which had often been breathed in my ears, and was as well known to me as the beatings of my own heart. This discovery, as you may believe, Miss Sterling, did not tend to allay either my curiosity or my impatience, and when in a few minutes the watcher drew back, I stole from my hiding-place and creeping up to the open doorway, listened. A sound of pacing steps came to my ears. The entrance was guarded.

"For a moment I stood baffled, then remembering the lantern which had been carried into the building, I withdrew quietly from the door, and began a tour of inspection round about the mill in the hope of spying some glimmer of light from one or more of the many windows and in this way learn the exact spot to which Mr. Barrows had been taken. It was a task of no mean difficulty, Miss Sterling, for the bushes cluster thick about those walls, and I had no light to warn me of their whereabouts or of the many loose stones that lay in heaps here and there along the way. But I would not have stopped if firebrands had been under my feet, nor did I cease my exertions or lose my hope till I reached the back of the mill and found it as dark as the side and front! Then indeed I did begin to despair, for the place was so solitary and remote from observation, I could not conceive of any better being found for purposes that required secrecy and concealment. Yet the sombre walls rose before me, dark and unrelieved against the sky; and nothing remained for me but to press on to the broad west end and see if that presented as unpromising an aspect the rest.

"I accordingly recommenced my toilsome journey, rendered dangerous now by the vicinity of the water and the steepness of the banks that led down to it. But I did not go far, for as, in my avoidance of the stream, I drew nearer and nearer to the walls, I caught glimpses of what I at first thought to be the flash of a firefly in the bushes, but in a moment discovered it to be the fitful glimmer of a light through a window heavily masked with leaves. You can imagine what followed from what I told you. How I climbed the tree, and seated myself on the limb that ran along the window, and pushing aside the leaves, looked in upon the scene believed by those engaged in it to be as absolutely unwitnessed as if it had taken place in the bowels of the earth.

"And what did I see there, Miss Sterling? At first little. The light with its wan so dim and the window itself so high from the floor, that nothing save a moving shadow or two met my eye. But presently becoming accustomed to the position, I discovered first that I was looking in on a portion of the cellar, and drooping and his hands fall helplessly to his side as if he felt that he had exhausted every argument, and that nothing was left to him but silence.

"All this, considering the circumstances and the scene, was certainly startling enough even to one of my nature and history, but when in a few minutes later I saw Guy Pollard step forward, and seizing Mr. Barrows by the hand, draw him forward to what seemed to be the verge of a pit, I was that I felt as if I were seized by some deadly nightmare, and had to turn myself away and look at the skies and trees for a moment to make sure I was not the victim of a hallucination. When I looked back they were still standing there, but a change had come over Mr. Barrows' face. From being pale it had become ghastly, and his eyes, fixed and fascinated, were gazing into those horrid depths, as if he saw there the horrible fate which afterwards befall him. Suddenly he drew back, covering his face with his hands, and I saw a look pass from Guy Pollard to that watchful third figure, which, if it had not been on the face of a gentleman, I should certainly call demoniacal. The next instant the third figure stepped forward, and before I could move or utter the scream that rose to my lips, Mr. Barrows had disappeared from view in the horrid recesses of that black hole, and only Guy Pollard and that other mysterious one, who I now saw wore a heavy domino and mask remained standing on its dark verge.

Sudden change.

MRS. GEORGE FLEWELLING, St. John, N. B., writes—"I suffered from weakness and costiveness, so I bought a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and before I finished it I noticed a change. After using three bottles I am now entirely cured, and recommend B.B.B. as a positive cure for costiveness."

Tell your friends that the Mikado's wedding was a very quiet affair, and that the bride's mother was not present. Tell them that the Mikado's wedding was the most important event in the history of Japan, and that it was witnessed. It was literally a gathering of the nations. Through the foreign legations resident in Washington, all the principal countries of the world were officially represented. Added to these were the delegates from the Central and South American republics accredited to the Pan-American Congress, now in session, to these also the members of the Maritime Conference. And it was no ordinary representation.

Europe, Asia, and the All-Americas are here present at the capital of the United States in the persons of many of their most distinguished sons. Such a distinction has never before been accorded to any national capital.

There were also present the governors of about twenty different states, drawn hither for consultation in regard to the moralizing Congress for the erection of a centennial memorial building at Philadelphia, a matter that was first suggested at the meeting of the governors of the thirteen original states in 1887. Last, but not least, were the Senators and Representatives of the forty two states of the United States, and the delegates of four territories, welcoming the world as it were to the hospitalities of their Capitol.

Senator Wilson of Iowa has a special scheme for making the Republican party popular. "Speaker Reed has done a splendid thing," he says, "in appointing the most important committees, so that the House can get to work at once. Now, if the Ways and Means Committee will give us a tariff bill within ten days, say, after the holiday recess, we can adjourn Congress by the first day of July, or even earlier, and we will score a great point with the business interests of the country." "But you really don't believe that this is going to be done, Senator?" The Senator's only answer was a smile of doubt.

The government of the imperial archipelago over which the Mikado rules, since the establishment of permanent diplomatic relations with the authorities at Washington, has been represented by statesmen and diplomatists who have been prominent in the progressive movements in Japan. The present Japanese minister is Mr. Munemitsu Mutsu. The last season of the Democratic administration witnessed the debut of Mr. and Mrs. Mutsu in the world of official society at the American capital. Mrs. Mutsu soon won her way to the favor of the executive and cabinet circles, and the Japanese legation is one of the features of Washington social life during the fashionable season.

Mrs. Mrs. Mutsu is a representative of the aristocratic classes of her native land. The women of Japan are of small stature, and as a rule very beautiful, being a modified type of the Mongolian physiognomy. They are exceedingly neat in dress and coiffure. Mrs. Mutsu has abandoned her picturesque native costume and coiffure, and her western dresses are selected with great taste. The Japanese minister and his wife have a beautiful daughter, Saiya (Constancy) Mutsu, who is about fifteen years of age, and is receiving the highest feminine education in one of the fashionable schools of Washington.

The Democrats are pleased with the House elections committee, headed by Mr. Rowell. The committee, as a whole, is acceptable to both sides, which is an encouraging circumstance in view of the fact that there are a number of very vexatious election contests which will come before it.

It is a brewer case all around. The President nominates for a Supreme Court vacancy Circuit Judge Brewer, who has decided that brewers were not to be broken up in business under the Kansas prohibition law without reimbursement to the extent of their plant, and the prohibitionists object to the Senate's confirming the nomination.

Mr. Randall is in better health this week than he has been for some time. He has steadily gained, and is able to sit up in his room, but will not go to the Capitol till after the holidays.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Female Complaints.—On the mothers of England devolves much and serious responsibility in securing for their daughters robust health, frequently, alas! thoughtlessly sacrificed by culpable heedlessness at a particular period of life, when all-important changes take place in the female constitution, upon the management of which depends future happiness or misery. Holloway's Pills, especially if aided with the Ointment, have the happiest effect in establishing those functions upon the performance of which health and even life itself depend. Mother and daughter may safely use these detoxificant remedies without consulting anyone. Universally adopted as the one grand remedy for female complaints, these Pills never fail, never weaken the system, and always bring about the desired result.

ORANGEVILLE, JAN. 2, 1890.

THE MAYOR AND REEVE.

THE SUN is in hearty accord with the electors of Orangeville in showing their good judgment by electing Mr. Walsh to the office of Mayor and Mr. Lindsay to fill the position of Reeve. Both these gentlemen are well qualified to honestly and creditably fill those offices, which, we are confident, they will.

OUR 30TH VOLUME.

With this issue THE SUN enters upon its thirtieth year of publication. Ever since it was launched on the stormy sea of journalism — twenty nine years ago—THE SUN has tried, and we believe fairly accomplished the objects it was destined to overcome. It would be called self-praise if we were to mention the great achievements attained by this journal during the past twenty-nine years. Whenever a point could be seen tending to benefit Orangeville or the county of Dufferin, we were always on the right side, and advocated honest measures for the general improvement of the country. THE SUN will continue in the same consistent course which has characterized its brilliant and long career.

We wish you all a HAPPY and PROSPEROUS NEW YEAR!

ENDACOTT V. KEARNS.

UP to the evening of nominations, we did not expect that Mr. Henry Endacott would offer himself once more as a candidate for the deputy-reeveship. We cannot imagine why Mr. Endacott consented to run for that honorable position. At the last municipal elections, the present candidates were in the field for this same office. Some of Mr. Endacott's friends used low means to secure his election, but, nevertheless, he was defeated by a majority of sixteen votes.

THE SUN supported Mr. Kearns last year, and it does so again this year. We have no personal feelings against Mr. Endacott whatever, and we look forward to the time when he will decorate the Mayor's chair. At the same time, we do not see why Mr. Kearns should be turned out of office. He has done nothing to warrant such treatment, and we call upon the ratepayers of Orangeville to re-elect Mr. Kearns with an increased majority.

EDITORIAL NOTES

THE leading topic this week is, who is to be our representatives to fill the position of deputy reeve and councillors for the ensuing year. Echo answers, who?

THE Empress of Brazil died at the city of Oporto on Saturday last, from heart disease.

"SOL." DAVIS, proprietor of the Niagara Falls museum, died on the 27th inst., at the ripe age of 82 years.

HON. W. E. GLADSTONE was eighty years old Sunday. Letters, telegrams and presents in countless numbers were delivered to the Grand Old Man.

INFLUENZA is rapidly spreading in Europe. It has also started in the United States, and it is said fifty thousand people are down with it in New York.

The Customs Department at Guelph on Tuesday morning last, seized and destroyed twenty-five copies of the Detroit Sunday World, one of the most doubtful papers of this kind. If more of them were weeded out the better it would be for good morals, but it is not an easy thing to do.—Mercury.

The reports which have been scattered broadcast throughout the United States to the effect that the Government intends not to renew the modus vivendi next year are entirely unwarranted. By the Treaty of Washington Act passed by the Dominion Parliament last year, the modus vivendi expires on the 15th of February next, and in order to renew it further legislation will be required. Whether it will be renewed or not involves a question of policy which the Government has not yet considered.

EXPORTS AND IMPORTS.—The final statements of exports and imports for the last fiscal year have been received at the Customs Department, Ottawa, and the grand total of trade made up at the statistical office. The figures are:

|---|---|
| Exports | $89,189,167 |
| Imports | 115,224,931 |
| Entered for consumption | 109,673,447 |
| Duty collected | 23,784,523 |

The exports show a decrease of about a million as compared with last year, the imports an increase of $4,000,000, and goods entered for home consumption $2,000,000. The amount of duty collected is the highest received from customs sources in any one year in our history, and is a million and a half higher than last year. The grand aggregate of Canadian exports in the 22 years since Confederation is $1,834,944,456, imports $2,285,361,310, and the duty collected $350,119,523. The percentage of duty on total value of goods imported is 20.6, and amount of customs duties per head of population is 4.68.

Town Nominations.

Walsh elected Mayor by Acclamation.

LINDSAY IS REEVE FOR 1890.

Kearns and Endacott for the Deputy-Reeveship.

BAILEY and COBEIN win in the East.

CONTESTS IN THREE WARDS.

INTEREST TAKES IN SCHOOL TRUSTEE MATTERS.

Nominations under the provisions of the new by-law for the positions of mayor, reeve, deputy reeve and councillors of the town of Orangeville for 1890 took place in the town hall at 7.30 o'clock on Monday evening. The hall was completely filled with electors and other interested persons, which speaks well for the success of the new by-law; In former years only a few of the ratepayers attended nominations, but now they all turn out to a man.

When Clerk Hughson announced that he was ready to receive nominations F. C. Stewart, M P.P., proposed W. L Walsh for mayor; Dr. Henry seconded the nomination. Dr. Smith and Robt. Irvine then came forward and added H. E. Endacott's name to the list. John Gilchrist and Dr. Henry were also nominated for the office, but all resigned except Mr. Walsh, and the Clerk declared him elected by acclamation.

THE REEVESHIP.

Johnston Lindsay, Joseph Foster, John S. Leighton and G. B. Island were nominated to contest this office. The latter three resigned, and Mr. Lindsay was left in possession of a well merited promotion.

THE DEPUTY-REEVESHIP.

Mr. John Kearns, the present efficient Deputy-Reeve, was proposed by F. C. Stewart, and seconded by Dr. Henry. Mr. Henry Endacott, the gentleman who opposed Mr. Kearns last year, was by Messrs. J. C. Fox and Wm. Fiddes. This contest promises to be the most interesting fight of the whole election.

COUNCIL ASPIRANTS.

North Ward.—J. S. Youmans, W. Still and Jesse Ketchum. All are good men, and the North Ward ratepayers will have a hard time to decide which two are better qualified to represent them.

South Ward.—W. P. King, J. J. Hubbard, Geo. Dunning, Jas. Pinkney, Wm. Fogarty, Robt. McKeown and James May. The four latter have resigned, leaving the three former in the field.

East Ward.—Messrs. W. T. Bailey, W. R. Kent and Geo. Cobean were nominated for this ward. Mr. Kent has withdrawn, and Bailey and Cobean, last year's representatives, were declared elected by acclamation.

West Ward.—A triangular fight also takes place in this ward. Messrs. Marshall Green, Robt. Mann and Harry Gillespie are the gladiators. Mr. Green will undoubtedly be elected, and the battle will be between Messrs. Mann and Gillespie. At all events some one will be very much disappointed Monday night.

P. S. TRUSTEES.

North Ward.—Jno. S. Leighton and J. M. Bennett. Only one Trustee is wanted.

South Ward.—Jno. Perdue and Jas. May. The latter resigned, and left Mr. Perdue the office.

East Ward.—J. J. Kelly and Jos. H. Hughes. Both gentlemen were elected by acclamation.

West Ward.—J. R. Dodds, Geo. Wilcox and Wm. Cruikshank. Messrs. Wilcox and Dodds will probably represent the ward this year.

CANDIDATES' ADDRESSES.

At the expiration of the hour for taking nominations, the different candidates were allowed a few minutes to address the electors.

Mr. Walsh was the first speaker. He said he favored the scheme for holding the nominations in the evening, and referred to the "important" things done by the council of 1889. He also referred to the council's wise action in getting Orangeville made a customs port, and wound up by asking the people to elect him their Mayor for 1890.

Mr. Gilchrist, the retiring chief magistrate, took the platform next. He thanked the people for the confidence they had in him, and as he had occupied the civic chair for two terms, he would not be a candidate for the mayoralty this year.

Dr. Henry then took the floor, and made a wise address. First of all, he said he would take no municipal office. But the most important point of his speech was that of the poor sanitary condition of the town. He said Orangeville wanted a better system of water works and better sewerage. The Dr. attributed the cause of so much sickness to the very impure water used. All the following speakers grasped the suggestion.

Mr. Lindsay dealt chiefly with the finances of the town, and asked to be placed in the reeve's chair for this year.

Mr. Leighton was next called, and responded. He did not like some statements made by Mayor-elect Walsh, regarding the financial state of the town. He however retired from the contest for the reeveship.

Mr. Kearns satisfactorily explained his conduct in the county council re the graveling of Prince of Wales' road, and his action in the Shelburne high school question. His explanation ought to satisfy the editor of a local sheet, who assails an able deputy-reeve on these two questions.

Mr. Endacott, an aspirant for the deputy reeveship, asked the electors to place him in Mr. Kearns' position.

Nearly all the candidates for the council spoke at some length, and promised great things.

None of the would be School Trustees addressed the meeting, which broke up at about 10.30.

The receipts were large, and everybody appeared to be satisfied.

AN UNFORTUNATE ACCIDENT.—On Monday morning, while Mr. D. Conley, of Caledon, was driving on Mill street, near the C.P.R. depot, the horses took fright and ran away, breaking the buggy and throwing the driver out. His head hit on a stone, which caused a painful scalp wound. The unfortunate man was carried to the Royal Hotel in an unconscious state, and a physician was summoned. It required several stitches to sew up the cut.

THE MISFORTUNE OF A TRAMP.—A tramp entered a Market street store on Saturday and asked for a quarter to get a meal. He had a pretty good jag on, and the merchant was dumbfounded at his nerve.

"You never drink, I suppose?"

"No, sir, haven't tasted liquor for a month;" and at the same time his breath would sicken a horse.

"If you had told me the truth," remarked the merchant, "I would have given you a quarter."

He went out, and the next man he struck for a dime happened to be a strong temperance man.

"Will you give me a dime to get a bowl?" he asked.

"No, sir," was the reply. "If you had asked me for a dime to get something to eat, I might have given it to you, but I never encourage people to drink."

"Well, well," muttered the poor tramp, "I wish I knew when to tell the truth."—Stratford Times.

ELECTION ECHOES.

Polling on Monday.

W. T. Bailey was the center of the evening.

Mayor-elect Walsh and Reeve-elect Lindsay had a pleasant nomination night.

Mr. Jas. Pinkney is out for the South Ward. His friends are confident of electing him.

Mr. Marshall Green's election in the West is a foregone conclusion; while Mann and Gillespie are working like Trojans for second place.

Every fair minded citizen admits that Mr. Kearns makes an excellent deputy reeve. The ratepayers will re-elect him with an increased majority.

On Monday night Mr. Gillespie gave the electors to understand that "Man" was a particular friend of his. We wonder what he thought when he saw the Post next day.

FLOOD IN DRAYTON.

Drayton had an unpleasant experience with the rain of Tuesday last The Advocate says:—"The hitherto sluggish current of the Conestoga increased in rapidity all day, and as evening approached the volume of water that rolled between its banks grew, both in magnitude and ferocity until its bounds became almost unlimited, and its force irresistible. Water poured down the streets and across blocks, finding its level in every hollow until the place presented more the appearance of a lake than a village. The water was still rising and cellars were filling. Fences were carried down, wood-piles were washed away, sidewalks uplifted and every moveable commodity became a floating mass. People left their couches and crowded the streets; a few to seek refuge in tenements of higher elevation; this, however, turned out to be not really necessary. Save in October of 1876 a higher watermark was never known to be reached in this vicinity, and at 2 o'clock in the morning a freighted boat could be seen floating down the middle of a street. The houses that dotted the commons gave to the place next morning the appearance of an oasis, and it was not until nearly night that they could be reached on dry land. Some damage and a great deal of inconvenience was experienced; but, so far as we have heard, the extent of the latter is far greater than that of the former. Horses were taken out of stables where they were standing up to their knees in water, and the floor all floating. All day Wednesday the bridge and flats were visited by crowds of surprised and half terrified spectators: Without the river being blocked up with ice and driftwood, such a flood was never before witnessed in Drayton.

SALEM.

The school meeting came off in high record here Thursday last. Two candidates were offered for Trustee—William Kyles and Isaac Pearson—the latter gaining the day by two votes. Mr. J. Platt occupied the chair. The meeting was closed with a short address from Thos. White, Esq.

SHELBURNE.

An open vote will be taken on the present new by-law in Melancthon at the next election.

A young lad named Brown was caught in the act of tapping the till in Reid's fruit store the other day. The young thief was allowed to go with a caution never to repeat such actions.

A frisky team of horses which belonged to Farmer Torrence, of Amaranth, ran away from Laidlaw's elevator on Tuesday week. The C.P.R. express and the dashing animals very nearly met at Victoria street. One of the horses fell and brought the runaways to a standstill. Little damage was done.

The Dufferin Farmer's Institute will meet here on Friday, Jan'y 3rd, 1890. A large attendance is requested, as this will be a very important meeting.

It is not astonishing that Dakota farmers should be moving into Manitoba. The conditions of settlement, of climate and of business must have become very oppressive when people are brought face to face with starvation in a country alleged to be one of the most attractive in America. The superiority of Montana and the Canadian Northwest to the adjoining United States territory is getting to be pretty well known, and people are beginning to understand the advantages of settling north of the boundary line.

EIGHT NEGROES LYNCHED.—A mob of several hundred men raided the jail at Barnwell Court House, at South Carolina, at 2 o'clock on Sunday morning last, overpowered the jailer, and took out eight negro prisoners charged with murder. They were Ripley Johnson and Mitchell Adams, charged with murdering a man named Hefferman, and six others charged with the murder of young Martin. The prisoners were taken out of town and shot to death. The jailer was tied and forced to accompany the lynchers. The whole thing was conducted in a very skilful manner, the citizens of the town not knowing about it. A great many negroes are collected at the scene of the lynching, and trouble is anticipated.

ELEVEN PERSONS BURNED TO DEATH.—About 2 o'clock on Sunday morning last, Hurontoo, Mich., Theodore Gross, his wife and 8 children with a visitor were consumed in a burning dwelling. Theodore Gross returned from a dance at 2 o'clock. At 2.30 a son, Theodore, jr., returned from the Huron stamp mills, where he is employed. He went into the house and to bed. Shortly after he was awakened by his brother Nicholas who had heard screams coming from an adjoining room occupied by their three sisters and three little brothers. They ran to the door and found the room a mass of flames. The boys jumped and were seriously hurt. Nothing could be done to save the eleven inmates.

Simultaneously with the abnormally low price of wheat in the United States and Canada, comes the announcement that another wheat-growing competitor has entered the foreign market. Mexico it seems is now exporting wheat from the state of Sonora to Liverpool, thus adding another to the already many competitors in that market. El Economista Mexicano, in noticing some shipments of the product from that state, gives the cost of 2,000 pounds of Sonora wheat delivered in Liverpool at $32 70 gold; sold in Liverpool at seven shillings sixpence a central, there results, per ton, $37.40, gold, leaving a profit of $4 70 in gold, from which have to be paid commissions for selling in Liverpool. It adds that this result is likely to largely increase the production of wheat in Sonora, for which, in soil and climate, a large portion of the state is well suited.

THE New York Mail and Express says to those who are inclined to jeer at "la grippe," or in plain English, head-crushing headache:—"All we have to say is, we wish they may get it. Then they will know whether it is the grip or not. When their head aches as if it would split; when they have a raging fever; when their appetite flees, and they do not want anything to eat, drink or smoke; when they grow as weak as babies in less than twelve hours; when every one of the 204 bones in their anatomies ache each on its own account and conjointly with the rest, and every muscle feels as if it had been pounded with a club, drawn through a knothole, tied in a hard knot and then used as a sandbag; when finally every mucous membrane in their bodies is in a state of greater or less inflammation, and all their serous membranes are dried up, and their joints creak; when every incoming breath is likely to produce a stitch in the side, and every outgoing breath turns into a success on the slightest provocation—then, perhaps, they will be willing to acknowledge that la grippe is here and has got them.

CATARRH,
CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER
A NEW HOME TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. NB.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. DIXON & SON, 308 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.
Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

BURDOCK PILLS

SUGAR COATED.

A SURE CURE

For BILIOUSNESS, CONSTIPATION, INDIGESTION, DIZZINESS, SICK HEADACHE, and DISEASES OF THE STOMACH, LIVER AND BOWELS.

THEY ARE MILD, THOROUGH AND PROMPT IN ACTION, AND FORM A VALUABLE ADD TO BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS IN THE TREATMENT AND CURE OF CHRONIC AND OBSTINATE DISEASES.

COLD IN HEAD — CATARRH — THE 4 STAGES. — CONSUMPTION — DEATH.

There is positive danger to health and life in neglecting a case of Cold in the Head or Catarrh, and at this season, with its changeable weather, unusual moisture and sudden changes from heat to cold, there is peculiar liability to cold in the head. A neglected case of Cold in the Head rapidly developes into Catarrh, and neglected Catarrh just as certainly develops into Consumption and leads to premature death. Medical testimony proves conclusively that a large percentage of all the deaths occurring from Consumption had their origin in a neglected Cold, which, by g radual stages, developed into Catarrh, then into Consumption, that dread disease with which medical science is as yet unable to cope successfully. If you are suffering from Cold in the head, or from any of the symptoms of Catarrh such as bad breath, dull oppressive headache, droppings from the head into the throat, hawking and spitting, copious discharges from the nostrils, losing sense of smell, taste becoming dull, hacking cough, or a general feeling of debility, lanky voice, a clinging or cracking sound in your chest when breathing, a feeling of dispeasure, particularly on stooping, a feeling of tiredness and indisposition to exertion, a hulling of nausea in the morning when attempting to dislodge accumulations in the throat. Do not neglect them. These are but a few of the many symptoms of Catarrh, and if you experience any of them BE WARNED IN TIME. Do not permit them to run under the mistaken impression that the disease will eventually wear away. It will not, but on the contrary will steadily increase, as it has thousands before. Procure at once a bottle of NASAL BALM, the only certain and speedy cure ever offered to the public for Cold in the Head and Catarrh. This is no idle assertion, but an unquestionable fact, which is verified by thousands of testimonials in our possession telling of marvellous cures. These testimonials we have received from all parts of the Dominion, and we append a few, selected at random, as a fair sample of the whole:—

Mr. Alex Evans of Sydenham, Ont., says:—Gents: I may state that I have been afflicted with Catarrh for seven or eight years, and it was attended with the consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears, and sickening pain in the head from the over of the eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was a temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm are sweet breath, stoppage of the droppings into the throat (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the Balm will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

James H. McLeod, Mink River Road, N. S., says:—I have tried other remedies for Catarrh, but received little or no good from them. Your NASAL BALM is certainly the BEST REMEDY I have tried, and all you claim for it. The fact that it is pleasant and convenient to use adds greatly to its value, but its chief worth lies in being a CERTAIN CURE for that unpleasant disease—Catarrh.

Wm. Chas. Hanley, postmaster, Spry Bay, N. S., says:—I submit the following to the public that any who may be afflicted may be benefited by the same remedy. Two bottles of your NASAL BALM has RESTORED to PERFECT HEALTH a four year old child of ours, suffering from Catarrh.

Henrietta Blackwell Parker, Ont., says:—Your NASAL BALM is the BEST REMEDY I have ever used for Catarrh. I can breathe more freely than before and my throat has regained its sweetness. I can order NASAL BALM a boon to the suffering.

Miss Maggie M. Martin, Terwood, P. A., says:—Through a friend in Canada I became acquainted with your NASAL BALM. I have suffered for years with Catarrh, and it is the first remedy from which I have experienced relief, and I feel certain it will cure me.

Miss Minnie McNairn, Mille Roches, Ont., says:—Your bottle of NASAL BALM did me much good. The pain in my head disappeared before I had used the bottle, and I find myself receiving the greatest benefit. I am certain NASAL BALM will cure my Catarrh if its use is persevered in.

Mr. John H. Adams, merchant, Brantford, Ont., says:—I have used NASAL BALM for Catarrh, and found it to be a CERTAIN CURE.

W. A. Doyle, Beulah, Man., writes:—As a family medicine to check Catarrhal affections or Cold in the Head, NASAL BALM HAS NO EQUAL. We prize it highly.

Mr Schlenzig, Toronto, says:—For a number of years my wife has been badly troubled with Catarrh. Dr —— have promised to cure her, but after using his remedy for months she became worse and weaker than before, and I found that I had spent $36 for medical treatment that did no good. My wife then began to use NASAL BALM and has improved wonderfully, and she is better and stronger than for years. Your remedy is the best in the market and you can use this as testimony.

Emilie Pelletier, Grenville, says:—I can scarcely find words to tell you how highly I prize NASAL BALM. Its effects in my case have been wonderful.

Alfred H. Dales, Torbert, Ont., writes:—Your NASAL BALM has made a new man of me. I never used a remedy so satisfactory.

A CAUTION.—Beware of imitations. If your dealer has not got NASAL BALM in stock do not let him persuade you to take any other remedy which he may say is just as good, but send direct to the undersigned and it will be sent you on receipt of price—50 cents and $1.00 per bottle.

Poetry.

NEW YEAR'S EVE.

Silent we stand 'neath the wintry sky,
The minutes are dying fast;
When out on the midnight air there rings
The sound of the bellowed last;
Clashing and chiming the Old Year out,
As we stand at the New Year's door,
Waiting with half reluctant steps
To cross its threshold o'er.

Failed changes the Past has been;
And changes will come again,
Bringing their wealth of untold joy,
Or a wealth of infinite pain;
Lessening their hold on earthly things
And pleasures so transient here;
Weleoming in from love and lives,
And parting with those held dear.

As we look back with a lingering glance
O'er by gone months and days,
How little we find for thanksgiving,
How much we find for praise!
Should we, then, hesitate to cross
And enter another year,
Rich in that all-satisfying love
That casts out every fear?

Hush! For one moment silence reigns;
Stilled in the merry din;
Quietly let the Old Year go,
And let the New pass in;
Only an instant, and then with a rush,
As if all the bells on earth
Had caught the sound and lent their voices
To welcome the New Year's birth.

THE DIFFERENCE.

When she heard her sisters,
In all meekness, to obey
Their respective lords and masters
And accept their sightful sway,
Then she tossed her head so proudly,
Then she said, "You wait and see;
No one in the male creation
Will e'er make a slave of me!"

When she heard her friends consulting,
Asking for a new spring hat,
Urging unbelieving husbands
That they need this or that,
Then she said, "Oh, how I scorn it!"
Then her haughty spirit rose,
And she cried, "You see if ever
I go begging for my clothes!"

And you ought to see her really,
Now that she at last is wed,
Icing cooks and lighting fires
While her husband lies in bed,
Or on to wear her last year's bonnet
She to-day does not refuse;
To brush his coat she's ever ready—
And they say she shines his shoes.

FORESTRY.

To the Editor of the Sun:

SIR,—I am glad to find that many people throughout Ontario are planning the creation of small plantations of two or more acres, generally of hardwood trees along the north, or whichever may be the most exposed side of their farms, and as many questions have been sent here on the subject, perhaps you will allow a few words in your columns.

It always must be remembered that planting lines of trees, say twenty or thirty feet apart, though undoubtedly good for windbreaks, is not the way either to grow timber rapidly or grow it well. In the first place they are standing in dry, sunny spots, and need much more mulching than is in generally contemplated to give them, so that their growth is checked. Next, when they do grow they run to branches—every branch forms a knot—and bye and bye, when it is time to cut it down, instead of a long, straight, valuable stick, we have a short and knotty, and an infinity of branches, useful for anything but fuel.

In the large plantations formed of late years in Kansas and other American states, it is customary to plant the young trees four feet apart, calculating ultimately to cut out three-fourths as they get too close. This soon shades the ground and keeps down weeds, while closely planted, and all striving to rise above their fellows, one tree draws another up. The lower branches die and fall off, and many fine clear stems are left, which grow much more rapidly than isolated trees in the open. It is remarkable that most of this work was done of men who had never before planted trees, yet was quite a success. They were, however, supplied with good nursery plants.

Yours, etc.,
R. W. PHIPPS.

ST. JOHN'S HOSPITAL REMEDIES WILL GIVE YOU HEALTH!

A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have thousands of hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards attending upon the Professors in charge. The renowned physicians of the world teach and practice here, and the conclusions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Company, patent proprietors of these hospitals, patented the prescriptions of these hospitals, patented the specifics, and although at a cost from $25 to $100 in securing the attention of their distinguished proprietors, yet in this way the public of Canada are offered at the price of the quack patent medicine the best medical skill of the world. Let no prejudice stand in the way of your getting relief, for in the worst cases it may be the means of saving life. The worst diseases fall before a reliable course of these medicines in most cases within a few days. The Hospital Remedies make no unwarrantable claims. The specific for CATARRH cures that, and nothing else; so with the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLES; BREWER'S, a cure for the G. N. R. troubles of DYSPEPSIA, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their own cure. To these is a Gem of a specific for FEVER and AGUE, one for FEMALE WEAKNESS—a GENERAL TONIC and BLOOD-MAKER that will build up and GIVES FUNN AND FULNESS, and an incomparable remedy for NERVOUS DEBILITY.

INFATUATION.

Near to thee, near to thee, off, in my musing,
Missing thee ever, the will-o-the-wisp,
Still I have followed through Sight and through Sensing,
Know I was near to thee.
Felt I was dear to thee.
Dreamed that you called and I said, "I am coming,"
Dreamed I was held in your arms to be kissed;
Followed thee, wistfully, year after year,
Loved thee, and missed thee, and longed for thee, dear.
Lost to me, lost to me, ever and ever,
Must I resign thee, oh, King of my heart?
To find thee, and bind thee, never, oh, never,
To hold thee as lost to me.
Whatever the cost to me,
Severed forever, vain every endeavor,
Always to know we are always apart;
To know that the space that divides from your face
Can never be traversed, whatever the pace,
Bleed to me, bleed to me, over and over,
Was thy essence of presence near or afar
Friend of my soul and closer than lover,
More than confessed to me
Then wert a rest to me,
All that thou wert to me slow to discover.
Grand as a king and calm as a star;
Enthroned in my heart and set high in my sky,
Still loyal to thee I will live and will die.
Pity me, pity me, fruitlessly seeking,
Tireless as hopeless and eager as vain;
With soul that is faint and heart that is breaking,
Still I will cry to thee,
Strive to get nigh to thee.
List, as for life, for the sound of thy speaking.
Hark to thy silence with exquisite pain
And still, if thou beckon, my star and my king,
I have no choice but thy following:
Over the river that bounds the forever,
Through infinite grace thy soul I will trace;
Tantalizing, persisting, but faltering never.
Down many flights to thee.
Up hazy heights to thee.
Rewarded at last my untiring endeavor,
I count it great joy if discerning thy face,
And near or afar, wherever you are,
You still are enthroned my king and my star.

CHAPTER XIII. (CONTINUED.)

GUY POLLARD.

"A cry, so smothered that it scarcely came to my ears, rose for an instant from the pit, then I saw Guy Pollard stoop forward and put what seemed to be a question to the victim below. From the nature of the smile that crossed his lips as he drew back, I judged it had not been answered satisfactorily; and was made yet more sure of this when the third person, stooping, took up the light, and beckoning to Guy Pollard, began to walk away. Yes, Miss Sterling, I am telling no goblin tale, as you can see if you will cast your eyes on our companion over. They walked away, and the light grew dimmer and dimmer and the sense of horror deeper and deeper, till a sudden cry, rising shrill enough now from that deadly hole, drew the two conspirators slowly back to stand again upon its fatal brink, and as it seemed to me, propound again that question, for answer to which they appeared ready to barter their honor, if not their souls.

"And this time they got it. The decisive gesture of the masked figure, and the speed with which Guy Pollard disappeared from the spot, testified that the knowledge they wanted was theirs, and that only some sort of action remained to be performed. What that action was I could not imagine, for, though Mr. Pollard carried away the lantern, the masked figure remained.

"Meantime Darkness was ours; a terrible darkness, as you may imagine, Miss Sterling, in which it was impossible not to wait for a repetition of that smothered cry from the depths of this unknown horror. But it did not come; and amid a silence awful as the grave, the minutes went by till at last, to my great relief, the light appeared once more in the far recesses of the cellar, and came twinkling on till it reached the masked figure which, to all appearance, had not moved hand or foot since it went away.

"Miss Sterling, you have doubtless consoled yourself during this narration with the thought that the evil which I had seen done had been the work of Guy and a person who need not necessarily have been our friend here. But I must shatter whatever satisfaction you may have derived from the possible absence of Dwight Pollard from this scene, by saying that when the lantern paused and I had the opportunity to see who carried it, I found that it was no longer the hand of the younger brother, but had been transferred to that of Dwight Pollard, and that he, not Guy, now stood in the cellar before me.

"As I realize that we are not alone, I will not dilate upon his appearance, much as it struck me at the time. I will merely say he offered a contrast to Guy, who, if I may speak so plainly in this presence, had seemed much at home in the task he had set himself, incongenial as one might consider it to the usual instincts and habits of a gentleman. But Dwight—you see I can be just, Miss Sterling—looked anxious and out of place; and instead of seeming to be prepared for the situation, turned and peered anxiously about him, as if in search of the clergyman he expected to find standing somewhere on this spot. His surprise and horror when the masked figure pointed to the pit were evident Miss Sterling; but it was a surprise and a horror that immediately settled into resignation, if not apathy; and after his first glance and shuddering start in that direction he did not stir again, but stood gazing like a statue while the masked figure spoke, and when he did move it was to return the way he had come, with the look or a gesture toward the sombre form which so much that was manly and blithe day musk in a darkness that must have seemed to that sensitive nature the prototype of his grave."

"And is that all, Miss Colwell?" came with a strange intonation from Dwight Pollard's lips, with a triumphant look to my direction.

"It is all I have to tell," was the reply; and it struck me that her tone was as peculiar as his. "Minutes, seconds, even, spent under such circumstances, seem like hours; and after a spell of what appeared an interminable waiting, I allowed myself to be overcome by the disquiet and terror of my situation, and dropping from my perch, crept home."

"You should have stayed another hour," he dryly observed. "I wonder at an impatience you had never manifested till then."

"Do you?"

The meaning with which she said this the gesture with which she gave it twice struck us both aback.

"Woman!" he thundered, coming near to her with the mingled daring and repugnance with which one advances to crush a snake, "do you mean to say that you are going to publish this much of your story and publish no more? That you will sell the world this and not tell ——"

"What I did not see?" she interpolated, looking him straight in the eye as might the serpent to which I have compared her.

"Good God!" was his horrified exclamation "and yet you know ——"

"Pardon me," her voice broke in again, "You have heard what I know," and she bowed with such an inimitable and mocking grace, and yet with such an air of sinister resolve, that he stood like one fascinated, and let her move away towards the door without seeking by word or look to stop her. I said you right, you see," were her parting words to him as she paused just upon the threshold to give us a last and scornful look. "So right," she added, shaking her close shut hand, that I doubt if even your life could escape should I choose to remember in court what I have remembered before you two here to-day."

"And forget———" he began.

"And forget," she repeated, "what might defeat the ends of that justice which demands a life for the one so wantonly sacrificed in the vat whose hideous depths now open almost under your feet." And, having said these words, she turned to go, when, looking up, she found her passage barred by the dark form of Guy Pollard, who, standing in the doorway with his hands upon either lintel, surveyed her with his saturnine smile, in which for this once I saw something that did not make me recoil, certain as I now was of his innate villany and absolute connection with Mr. Barrows' death.

She herself seemed to feel that she had met her master; for, with a hurried look in his face, she drew slowly back, and, folding her arms, waited for him to move with a patience too nonchalant not to be forced.

But he did not seem inclined to move and I beheld a faint blush as of anger break out on her cheek, though her attitude retained its air of superb indifference, and her lips, where they closed upon each other, did not so much as break their lines for an instant.

"You are not going, Miss Colwell," were the words with which he at last broke the almost intolerable suspense of the moment; "at least, not till you have given us the date of this remarkable experience of yours."

"The date?" she repeated, icidly. "What day was it that Mr. Barrows was found in the vat?" she inquired, turning to me with an indifferent look.

His hand fell like iron on her arm:

"You need not appeal to Miss Sterling," he remarked. "I am asking you this question, and I am not a man to be baulked nor frightened by you when my life is at stake. What night was it on which you saw me place Mr. Barrows in the vat? I command you to tell me or ——"

His hands closed on her arm, and—she did not scream, but I did; for the look of the inquisitor was in his face, and I saw that she must succumb, or be broken like a reed before our eyes.

She chose to succumb. Deadly pale and shaking with the terror with which he evidently inspired her, she turned upon me too thickly and too fast. I felt ill as I passed the threshold of my room, and was barely conscious when a few hours later the landlady came in to see why I had not made my appearance at the supper table.

CHAPTER XIV.

CORRESPONDENCE.

My illness, though severe, was not of long continuance. In a week I was able to be about my room; and in a fortnight I was allowed to read the letters that had come to me. There were two, either of them calculated to awaken dangerous emotions; and, taken together, making a draft on my powers which my newly gained health found it hard to sustain. The one was signed Rhoda Colwell, and the other Dwight Pollard. I read Rhoda Colwell's first.

It opened without preamble:

I sought revenge and have found it. Not in the way I anticipated, perhaps, but still in a way good enough to satisfy both myself and the spirit of justice. You will never t ust Dwight Pollard again. You will never come any nearer to him than you have to day. You have an upright soul, and whether you believe his declarations or not, can be safely relied upon to hold yourself aloof from a man who could lend his countenance to such a cowardly deed as I saw perpetrated in the cellar a month or so ago. Honor does not wed with dishonor nor truth with treachery. Constance Sterling may marry whom she may; it will never be Dwight Pollard.

Convinced of this, I have decided to push my vengeance no further. Not that I believe Mr. Barrows committed suicide, any more than I believe that Dwight and Guy Pollard could be saved by any mere alibi, if I chose to speak. Men like them can find ready tools to do it six week, and if they had been a hundred miles away instead of mere six, I should still think that the will which plunged Mr. Barrows into his dreadful grave was the same which once before had made him quake the hearts of his threatened dows. But public disgrace and execration are not what I seek for my recreant lover. The lesser punishment which he my self can mete to what I have been forced to endure and what he shall be made to suffer. Guilty or not he can never escape that now; and it is a future which I gloat upon and from which I would not have him escape, no, not at the cost of his life, if that life were mine, and I could shorten it at a stroke.

And since human nature is human nature, and good hearts as well as bad yield sometimes to a fatal weakness, I would add that the facts which I suppress are always facts, and that if I see in you or in him any forgetfulness of the gulf that separates you, I shall not think it too late to speak, though months, and years to years, and I am no longer anything but old. RHODA COLWELL.

Close upon these words I read those others.

MISS STERLING:—Pardon me that I presume to address you. Pardon the folly, the weakness of a man who, having known you for less than a week, finds the loss of your esteem the hardest of the many miseries he is called upon to bear. I know that I can never recover this esteem—if, indeed, I ever possessed it. The revelation of the secret which disgraced our family has been fatal; the secret which our mother commanded us on our deathbed to preserve, foreseeing that, if it should become known that we had been guilty of the occurrence of the seventeenth of August, nothing could save us from the suspicion that we were guilty of the real catastrophe of the twenty fourth of September. Alas! my mother was a keen woman, but she did not reckon upon Rhoda Colwell; she thought if we kept silent hell and heaven would find no tongue. But hell and heaven have both spoken, and we stand suspected of crime, if not absolutely accused of it. Hard as this is to bear—and it is harder than you might think for one in whom the base and cowardly action into which he was betrayed a month ago has not entirely obliterated the sense of honor—I neither dare to complain of it nor of the possible consequences that may follow if Rhoda Colwell slights my brother's warning and carries out her revenge to the full. Deeds of treachery and shame must bear their natural fruit, and we are but reaping what we sowed on that dreadful night when we allowed David Barrows to taste the horrors of his future grave. But though I do not complain, I would fain say a final word to one whose truth and candor have stood in such conspicuous relief to my own secrecy and repression. Not in way of hope, not in way of explanation even. What we have done we have done, and it would little become me to assign motives and reasons for what in your eyes—and, I must allow, in my own—no motive or reason can justify or even excuse. I can only place myself before you as one who abhors his own past; regarding it indeed with such remorse and detestation that I would esteem myself blessed if it had been my body, instead of that of Mr. Barrows, which had been drawn from the fatal pit. Not that any repentance can rid me of the stain which has fallen upon my manhood, or make me worthy of the honor of your faintest glance: but it may make me a less debased object in your eyes, and I would secure that much, grace for myself, even at the expense of what many might consider an unnecessary humiliation. For you have made upon my mind in the short time I have known you a deep, and as I earnestly believe, a most lasting and salutary impression. Truth, candor, integrity, and a genuine loyalty to all that is noblest and best in human nature no longer seem to me like mere names since I have met you. The selfishness that makes dark deeds possible has revealed itself to me in all its hideous deformity since the light of your pure ideal fell upon it; and while naught on earth can restore me to happiness, or even to that equanimity of mind which my careless boyhood enjoyed, it would still afford me something like relief to know that you recognize the beginning of a new life in me, which, if not all you could desire, still has the gleam of light upon it which redeems it from being what it was before I knew you. I will, therefore, ask not a word from you, but a look. If, when I pass your house to morrow afternoon at six o'clock, I see you standing in the window, I shall know you grant me the encouragement of your sympathy, a sympathy which will help me to endure the worst of all my thoughts, that directly, if not indirectly, Guy and myself may be guilty of Mr. Barrows' death; that our action may have given him an impetus to destroy himself, or at least have shown him the way to end his life in a seemingly secret manner; though why a man so respected and manifestly happy as he should wish to close his career so suddenly, is as a great a mystery to me as it can possibly be to you.

One other word and I am done. If, in the mercy of your gentle and upright nature, you accord me this favor, do not think I shall take advantage of it, even in my thoughts. Nor need you think that by so doing you may hamper yourself in the performance of a future duty; since it would be as impossible for me to ask, as for you to grant, the least suppression of the truth on your part; your candor being the charm of all others which has most attracted my admiration and secured my regard.

DWIGHT POLLARD.

Of the emotions produced in me by these two letters I will say nothing; I will only mention some of my thoughts. The first naturally was, that owing to my illness I had not received the latter letter till a week after it was written; consequently Dwight Pollard had failed to obtain the slight token of encouragement which he had requested. This was a source of deep regret to me, all the more that I did not know how to rectify the evil without running the risk of raising suspicion in the breast of Rhoda Colwell. For, unreasonable as it may seem, her words had created in me a dread similar to that which one might feel of a scorpion in the dark. I did not know how near she might be to me, or where she might strike. The least stir, the least turn of my head towards the forbidden object, might reveal her to be close to my side. I neither dared trust the silence nor the feel that all seemed well at present. A woman who could disguise herself as she had, and whose one definite desired object, gathering her purpose, she had vowed to serve with fidelity, however clear might seem the outlook. I felt as if my very thoughts were to demand from her intuition, and merely dared breathe my intentions to the walls, lest the remorseless breast should hurry them to her ears and awaken that formidable antagonist which to her was doubtless with a power which might easily make the most daring quail. And yet she must be braved; for not to save his life would I let such an appeal as he had made me go unanswered—so, though I knew the possibility resulted of there being simply the offspring of a crazed and calculating mind driven to its last resources. It was enough that I felt him to be true, however much my reason might recognize the possibility of his falsehood. Rather than slight a noble spirit struggling with a great distress, I would incur any penalty which a possible lapse of judgment might bring; my temperament being such that I found inexpressible shame in the thought that I might be deceived, than that, out of a spirit of too great caution and self love, I should fail an unhappy soul at the moment when my sympathy might be of incalculable benefit to its welfare.

The venomous threats and extreme show of power displayed in Rhoda Colwell's letter had overreached themselves. They roused my pride. They made me question whether it was necessary for us to live under such a dominion of suspense as she had prepared for us. If Dwight Pollard's asseverations were true, it would be a cruel waste of peace and happiness for him or me to rest under such a subjection, when by a little bravery at the outset her hold upon us might be annihilated and her potency destroyed.

The emotions which I have agreed to ignore came in to give weight to this thought. To save myself it was necessary to prove Dwight Pollard true. Not only my sense of justice, but the very life and soul of my being, demanded the settling of all suspicion and the establishment of my trust upon a sure foundation. While a single doubt remained in my mind I was liable to shame before my best self, and shame and Constance Sterling did not mix easily or well especially with that heaven of self interest added, to which I have alluded only a few paragraphs back.

But how, with my lack of resources and the apparent dearth of all means for attaining the end I had in view, I was to prove Rhoda Colwell's insinuations false, and Dwight Pollard's assertion true, was a question to which an answer did not come with very satisfactory readiness. Even the simple query as to how I was to explain my late neglect to Dwight Pollard occasioned me an hour of anxious thought; and it was not till I remembered that the simplest course was always the best, and that with a snake in the grass like Rhoda Colwell, the most fearless foot trod with the greatest safety, that I felt my difficulties on that score melt away. I would write to Dwight Pollard, and I would tell Rhoda Colwell I had done so, thus proving to her that I meditated nothing underhanded, and could be trusted to say what I would do, and do what I should say.

This decision taken, I sat down immediately and penned the following two notes:

MISS RHODA COLWELL:—Owing to illness your letter has just been read by me. To it I will simply reply that you are right in believing my regard could never be given to guilty man. As long as the faintest doubt of Mr. Pollard remains in my mind we are indeed separated by a gulf. But let that doubt in any way be removed, and I say to you frankly that nothing you could threaten or the world perform, would prevent my yielding to him the fullest sympathy and the most hearty encouragement.

I send him to day, in the same mail which carries this, a few lines, a copy of which I enclose for your perusal. Yours,

CONSTANCE STERLING.

MR. DWIGHT POLLARD:—For two weeks I have been too ill to cross my room, which must account both for this note and the tardiness I have displayed in writing it.

You assert that you know nothing of the cause or manner of a certain catastrophe. I believe you, and hope some day to have more than a belief, viz., a surety of its truth founded on absolute evidence.

Till that time comes we go our several ways, secure in the thought that to the steadfast mind calumny itself loses its sting when met by an earnest purpose to be and do only what is honest and upright.

CONSTANCE STERLING.

If you have any further communication to make to me, let me request that it be allowed to pass through the hands of Miss Colwell. My reasons for this are well founded.

MR. KEARNS' DEFEAT.

As will be seen by our report of the municipal elections in another column, Mr. John Kearns sustained defeat in the deputy-reeveship contest by a majority of twenty three votes. There are several reasons and excuses for the unsuccessful fight made by the deputy-reeve of '89. Mr. Kearns had to contend almost single-handed against the well-organized force of Mr. Endacott. Mr. Kearns made a good representative in the town and county councils, and he would, no doubt, have fulfilled the promises he made a year ago.

Now, Mr. Endacott has been placed in a position to make himself heard in the county council, and we expect him to start where Mr. Kearns left off. Shelburne's ambition for a high school is as high as ever yet, and the question will probably be brought up at the next meeting of the county council.

Mr. Endacott has been chosen by a majority of the ratepayers, and we hope he will be able to show them a clean record a year from now. However, THE SUN will watch his actions closely, and if he does wrong we will unhesitatingly tell him so. On the other hand, if he fills the position to perfection, as we wish to see him, we will give him full credit for what he has done.

BANK NOTE CIRCULATION.

(Montreal Gazette.)

In anticipation of legislation at the next session of the British Parliament, the Institute of Bankers of London has been discussing the bank note circulation of England and Wales. Mr. R H Palgrave, F.R.S., who opened the discussion, declared that there are really only two essentials in a note circulation, complete security and ready convertibility into metallic money, a view in which all the subsequent speakers concurred. A deposit of first class security, equal in value to the notes in circulation, should be at the back of every note issued, and a supply of coin should be provided so that the notes could be changed into gold and silver at the option of the holder. Upon another point there was also practical unanimity, namely, that the control of the note issues ought not to be in the hands of the Government. In Mr. Palgrave's opinion, a note issue worked by a considerable number of banks possesses many advantages over a circulation in the hands of one bank alone, and there is no reason why it should not be as completely secured, as readily convertible, and as carefully regulated, both as to amount and to the standing of the banks by which it was issued, as a circulation worked by one bank alone. There is, further, a great advantage to the public, and as banks only existed by reason of the services which they rendered to the public, there would appear to be every reason why they should be empowered to render these services in the most efficient way. To a Government or to a centralized bank, a note issue is merely the means of obtaining a revenue through the use of the value of the coin represented by the paper; to a bank working over a large district the note issue is much more than this—it is also an important part of the machinery through which it carried on its business. The value of the note issues to the country banks was set forth in an apt simile by Mr. Dun, of Parr's Banking Company, who remarked that if the leading country banks of England and Wales had the power of issue they could bring banking to the door of almost every villager—not one-sided banking, like that of the post office, which, he said, drained, but did not irrigate, but many sided banking which collected into its reservoirs all the streams, rivulets, and even rills of money, and after employing them, as far as requisite and prudent, in fostering the agriculture, the trade, and the manufactures of the district from which they were drawn, beneficently diverted the surplus stream to the irrigation, refreshment, and fertilization of other localities. This was the service which banking rendered to the country, but without the power of issue the service could only be given in an imperfect manner.

The insistence upon absolute security and ready convertibility of the note issues by experienced English bankers, carries a moral for Canadians. Our system has doubtless worked well; it has provided adequate banking facilities, a flexible currency, and, upon the whole, has been fairly free from serious calamities. Yet in every severe commercial crises, whenever the system in its practical working has been put to the test of a strain, one or more banks have succumbed, and so intensified the strin gency. The reason is not far to seek, and will be found to lie in inadequate reserves. Upon the note issues only one limitation is fixed by law—they must not exceed the amount of paid up capital. Subject to this restriction a bank may emit notes at will, without any other regard to provision for redemption or convertibility than such as prudence suggests. A system which proves defective when strength is most required ought surely not to be perpetuated by Parliament. The old adage that the strength of a chain is the strength of its weakest link will apply perfectly to a banking law, and, examined in this way, experience has clearly demonstrated that the Canadian system has its weak links. The lessons enjoyed by the banks in, indeed, very wide, the security of their operations being dependent much more on the skill and prudence of the management than upon the provisions of a statute. The character of the currency, the small demand for coin for export purposes, the enormously large borrowings by Government in foreign markets, have all contributed in covering defects in the note issues and reserves, by removing the dangers of a drain upon the stock of specie which to Great Britain is periodically experienced. How long this immunity may continue is an unknown factor, but certainly it would seem to be the duty of Parliament to base the banking system upon sound and tried principles, and to legislate for the continuency of a commercial crisis rather than to rest on the unstable security of presumed perpetual prosperity. Neither of the essentials of a note circulation as defined by Mr. Palgrave, in the quotation made above, can be said to exist in Canada as they are understood in England. No proportionate reserves are required to be held by our banks, and no security is specially lodged or retained against the note issues, which upon the failure of the bank invariable depreciate, and the redemption of which is delayed for many months. If Parliament does not undertake to deal with the note issues separately, as the peculiar character of our currency quite warrants it is doing, at least the banks should be required to maintain minimum reserves, proportioned to their demand liabilities, in order that the strength of the whole system may be increased.

ELECTION ECHOES.

All the railway men supported Mr. Endacott.

Municipal matters are quiet, for another year at least.

Harry Gillespie had sixteen "plumpers" in the West ward.

Mr. John S. Youmans headed the poll in the North. No wonder John S. feels jubilant.

Politically, the town council is Reform. There are eight of them, and only three Conservatives.

J J. Hubbard received forty-seven votes in the South. Many broken promises exist in this case.

The North ward gave Mr. Kearns an increased majority over last year, but the other three wards swelled Mr. Endacott's majority to 23.

REV. PASTOR MCKAY, OF COUNCIL BLUFFS, IS OPPOSITION TO THE PROHIBITORY LIQUOR LAW.—Rev. Pastor McKay, of St. Paul's Episcopal church, the wealthiest in the city of Council Bluffs has created some talk by his pronounced opposition to the prohibitory law. He says:—"After several years of trial of prohibition in the city the law has proved a miserable farce. I do not believe that the open saloon is as dangerous to the morals of the rising generation as the club room and private drinking habits, which prohibition always creates. I confess to being puzzled as to how prohibition will prevent a new generation of drunkards. I feel that I should be admitting religion to be a sad failure, should I declare that the aid of the Iowa legislature was necessary before we could reform the drunkard or prevent a new generation from arising in our midst. I believe that the whole subject should be taken out of the domain of politics. It is a moral question and should be so handled."

GREEN AND GILLESPIE PICKED FOR THE WEST.

The town was very quiet on Monday, compared with election days of former years. The principal contest was between Messrs. John Kearns and Henry Endacott for the deputy reeveship of Orangeville for 1890. Both are well known and popular men, and a very exciting battle was expected to take place. Last year these men met in a similar fight, and Mr. Kearns was elected by a majority of sixteen votes. This year, however, the tables were completely turned; Mr. Endacott captured the boom by twenty-three of a majority. Mr. Endacott and his friends worked hard for some time past to secure his election, and victory crowned their efforts.

The result of polling is as follows:

| | KEARNS. | ENDACOTT |

| North Ward | 80 | 57 |
| South " | 68 | 104 |
| East " | 69 | 72 |

NORTH WARD

Three good men were in the field for this ward, and the ratepayers would have a difficult task to tell which two could have better managed their affairs. Mr Still would have made a good, sensible representative, and if he isn't at the "green table" next year, it wont be THE SUN's fault.

SOUTH WARD.

Four candidates tried their level best to get into the council to look after the interests of the "solid" South. Messrs. King, Pinkney, Hubbard and Dunning were the aspirants. Mr. King's chances of re-election were always bright but it was hard to tell who the other alderman would be. Shortly after five o'clock the ballots were counted, and these figures registered:—

|---|---|
| King | 142 |
| Pinkney | 106 |
| Hubbard | 47 |
| Dunning | 60 |

EAST WARD.

Messrs. W. T. Bailey and George Cobean were elected by acclamation.

WEST WARD.

A spirited race between Messrs. Marshall Green, Harry Gillespie and Robert Mann was witnessed in the West. There was no doubt from the first that Mr. Green would have no trouble in "getting there," and the bitter fight was left to Messrs. Gillespie and Mann. Mr Green procured the popular vote of the ward, and Mr. Gillespie's "plumpers" landed him safely. At the close of the pole the vote stood:

|---|---|
| Green | 69 |
| Gillespie | 69 |
| Mann | 58 |

P. S. TRUSTEE ELECTION

There were only two wards where elections for public school trustees were held. In those wards, however, a good deal of interest was manifested. In the

EAST WARD

Messrs. J. J. Kelly, Jos. H. Hughes and T. T King were the combatants. Mr. Kelly, who has been an active member of the board for two years, was sure of re-election. The fight, therefore, was between Messrs. King and Hughes. The result was:

|---|---|
| Kelly | 106 |
| Hughes | 94 |
| King | 63 |

WEST WARD.

Messrs. J. R. Dodds, Geo. Wilcox and Wm. Cruikshanks were the trustee candidates in this ward. Mr. Cruikshanks has served several terms as a trustee, and the people wanted a change. Mr. Wilcox and Mr. Dodds will make excellent trustees. They enjoy the confidence of the electors of the west ward, as will be seen by the following returns.

|---|---|
| Dodds | 91 |
| Wilcox | 61 |
| Cruikshanks | 34 |

The board for 1890 will be composed of the following gentlemen:

North Ward—J. S. Leighton, J. F. Ewings.

South Ward—H Savage, J. Perdue.

East Ward—J. J. Kelly, Jos. H. Hughes.

West Ward—J. R. Dodds, G. Wilcox.

Louis Nathal, the well known author, musician and composer, died in New York Thursday evening of pneumonia superinduced by the grip. Nathal's best literary work was done on his successful plays, "The Suspect" and Monbars."

A letter from Baltimore says that within a year Archbishop Ireland, of St. Paul, is to be invested with a cardinal's hat and made Papal delegate for the United States. The information comes from such a source that there need be no doubt of its authenticity.

TOWNSHIP ELECTIONS.

Complete returns from the following municipalities where elections were held to our hour of going to press:

Monday was a day of excitement in the various townships where municipal elections were held. A good many surprises were encountered after the ballots were counted on the eve of the election.

We give below a complete report of the polling in the neighboring townships:

ARAMICHI.

The principal and most exciting contest in this township was the struggle between Messrs. C. Winkler, the reeve of '89, and Robt. Wansbrough. A great many people thought Mr. Winkler would have no trouble in defeating Mr. Wansbrough, but the latter gained the victory by a majority of twenty six votes.

The next hottest fight of the day was between Messrs. Wm. Johnston, who has been deputy reeve for the past two years, and D. McVanel, for the deputy reeveship. The former was elected by 135 of a majority.

For the Reeveship—Winkler, 258; Wansbrough, 281.

For the Deputy reeveship—McVanel, 197; Johnston, 232.

For Councillors—Turner, 318; Hudgson, 222; Hamilton, 218; Archer, 178; Sproule, 169

CALEDON.

Reeve, W. Stubbs (by acclamation); 1st deputy reeve, R. B. Hurst; 2nd deputy-reeve, J. McBride; councillors, Bacon and Russell. Tom Smith was left in the swim by forty eight votes.

EAST GARAFRAXA.

Reeve, Thos. Hamilton (by acclamation); deputy reeve, J. H. Simpson (by acclamation); councillors, D. Carroll, J. Turner, and J. Fearns.

THEIR LAST MEETING.

A Small Attendance at the Last Meeting of the Orangeville '89 Council.

The last meeting of the town council for 1889 was held in the council chamber on election evening. Mayor Gilchrist occupied the chair, and Councillors Lindsay, Bailey, Youmans, Ketchum, Walsh and Cobean were present.

The minutes of last meeting were read and confirmed.

ACCOUNTS

From A. A. Hughson, $41.25; Francis Irwin, $10; Rowell & Hutcheson, $4.37; R. Parkin $5.50; Thos. Lynch, $1 25; Myers & Robb, $3.00; ordered to be paid.

COMMUNICATIONS.

Frank O Brien wrote from the Palmer House, Toronto, requesting the use of town hall free of charge to address the citizens on the "Canadian Northwest." Mayor-elect Walsh moved that the communication be tabled. Carried.

A. Blue, provincial secretary, asked a number of questions regarding exemptions, etc. The communication will be presented as a memorial at the next meeting of the council.

Wm. Powis, of Toronto, wants to supply the town with a number of works on "Municipal Finances." No notice was taken of the communication, but the town retains a sample copy of the book.

REPORTS.

Mr. Walsh brought in the Assessment committee's report, which recommended that no action be taken regarding the petitions of Emma Smith and Hugh Haley. The report was adopted.

A PRESENT FOR THE MAYOR.

On motion, the mayor left the chair, and Mr. Bailey occupied it. Mr. Lindsay moved, seconded by Mr. Walsh, the following resolution:

"That this council desires to express its appreciation of the services tendered to the town by the retiring mayor, John Gilchrist, who has for nine years served the town in different capacities with untiring zeal; and that the sum of $40 be paid out of the funds of the town to cover the expenses necessarily incurred by him in connection with the mayoralty during the last two years."

The council then adjourned.

Miss Elizabeth Drexel, eldest daughter of the late Francis L. Drexel, Philadelphia, was married on Tuesday to Walter George Smith, a lawyer of that city. The ceremony was performed by Archbishop Ryan in the Catholic church at Holmesburg. The bride is one of the wealthiest ladies in her own right in America. She is a sister of Miss Kate Drexel, who recently entered the convent at Pittsburg.

NOVEL READING AND DIVORCE.—Ex Minister Phelps adds a curious chapter to the discussion of the marriage question. It is his theory that the sensational and highly emotional novel of modern times is at the bottom of most divorces. A woman becomes absorbed in this kind of literature, and her mind becomes diseased. She judges all men according to the standard of the impossible heroes who form her constant mental companions, and in comparison her husband seems tedious and too common place for her. He hasn't the grand ideas of life and destiny that the ideal hero has, his conversation is not sufficiently poetic and romantic. When a woman begins to feel in that way regarding her husband some other fellow is sure to happen along whom her distorted vision will transform into a hero. This is a serious charge to lay at the door of the novel, and one that has much truth in it. The ordinary love story which is continued from week to week in the monthly and weekly story papers is nauseating to a healthy mind, and injurious to a person capable of being interested by it. The novelists depict life as it is, and their heroes have faults and foibles with the rest of mankind. Thackeray and Dickens are responsible for no divorces. The woman who reads either of those authors will learn that the highest ideal of life consists in taking human nature as it is and in making the most of it.

In our last issue, we unintentionally neglected to mention the death of Mr. Martin Hill, who died from the effects of typhoid fever on New Year's day. Deceased was only 21 years of age, and was liked by everyone who came in contact with him.

BAZAAR—The ladies of the First Avenue Methodist church will hold a bazaar some time in the near future. The proceeds will be in aid of the organ fund. Notice of date hereafter.

HYMENEAL.—It is with great pleasure that we announce the marriage of Mr. T. G. Porter to Miss Euphemia Henderson, which took place on New Year's day. Rev D. C. Hossack, pastor of St. Andrew's church, performed the ceremony. The happy couple received many costly presents.

St. Andrew's Y. P. A.—The Young People's Association of St. Andrew's church held a meeting last Monday even ing. The secretary and treasurer's reports were presented and found correct. Mr. J. A. Aikin was elected president; Miss Sade Caldwell, secretary; Jno. Adamson, treasurer; Rev. D. C. Hossack, critic.

PASSED AWAY.—It is our sad duty this week to chronicle the death of Mr. Alexander Hughson, sr., which occurred at his residence, west Broadway, on Tuesday afternoon, at the ripe age of 72 years. Mr. Hughson was a well known and highly respected inhabitant. In his demise, Orangeville loses an honest and upright citizen

A CAT IN A CHURCH ORGAN.—When the organist at St. John's church, St. Thomas, was playing the voluntary at the service Sunday morning, all at once the organ omitted a few queer sounds, and then refused to further act. An examination led to the discovery of a cat in the inside of the instrument. The feline was in an emaciated condition, and appeared to have been penned up in the organ for some time.

A BABY INSTANTLY KILLED.—A sad and fatal accident occurred at St. John's rectory, Mono, on New Year's day, by which the two month old daughter of Rev. A. O. Watt lost her life. It appears that the rev. gentleman had been engaged to officiate at a marriage ceremony that day, and had his horse and buggy waiting at the door. He went into the house for something, leaving his wife and the babe in the buggy. While Mr. Watt was in the house, the horse became frightened and dashed away, upsetting the vehicle and throwing the occupants out. Mrs. Watt was seriously injured, but the baby was less fortunate, a fracture of the skull killing it instantly. Mr. Watt has our heartfelt sympathy in his sad affliction.

HIGHWAY ROBBERY.—On Saturday evening Mr. John Carruthers was robbed of $9 on the Brock Road below Coady's hotel by a fellow who had been working among the farmers in that vicinity. Carruthers and Weir had left Coady's together when this chap came up, and after some little talk induced Carruthers to start back to the hotel, leaving Weir to go on. As soon as he got away a considerable distance he jumped on Carruthers and took his money. The loser reported the matter to the police, and Constable Elliott went down to Coady's to arrest the man, who was in bed. Although he was only half dressed, the chap was not scared by the constable's revolver and baton, but gave him a black eye and dared him to arrest him. Elliott ran back in the middle of the night for assistance, but when he got there the stranger had departed and is now at large.—Penetanguishene Record.

A GUN CLUB ORGANIZED.—A large and crowded meeting of sports was held at the Dufferin House on Thursday evening last, to organize a gun club. The organization is designated as "The Orangeville Gun Club and Game Protection Society," and the following officers were elected: J. C. Fox, president; J. H. Duffy, 1st vice-president; Joseph Foster, 2nd vice-president; T. Williamson, secretary; John Irving, treasurer. Committees were appointed, and a match will take place soon. The club can manage with flourishing prospects.

GRAND VALLEY.

ACCIDENT.—Johnnie Birney, son of Mr. Geo Birney, met with an accident on Monday. The horses ran off with the wagon down the street, and Johnnie fell through the rack. His face was scratched and bruised, and he had a narrow escape from being killed.

Mr Samuel Looney, son of Charles Looney, of Walla Walla, Washington Territory, formerly of East Luther, is here on a visit. Mr. Looney states that business is prospering in the far west on the Pacific slope. Mr. Charles Looney and family have now been residents of Walla Walla for ten years.

SHOULD BE PUNISHED.—The village boys should be very careful how they behave themselves when let loose for a frolic. Some of them deserve punishment for breaking the windows of Mr. Stewart Tate's blacksmith shop on Tuesday night. We trust that such like occurrences in future will not have to be reported. We do not object to a little fun among the boys, but when it comes to damaging property the fun is shown up in a different light.—Star.

SHELBURNE.

Mr. Hugh Falconer, of Shelburne, shipped a mastiff pup on Monday to Vancouver, British Columbia. The price received for the pup was $30.00. The purchaser pays all express charges.

From a private letter shown us by Mr. A. B Noble, we are able to quote a few of the prices paid for produce in Elk City, Nebraska: Apples, 50c per bag; Potatoes, 20c. Oats, 15c; Corn, 17c; Eggs, 25c., and butter, 20c.

At the Melanchton nomination the ratepayers, and particularly an ex-deputy reeve, were loud in their denunciation of the custom of the County Council in granting $100 to the Warden for his services.

PRACTICE.—The Shelburne Fire Companies had a short practice on New Year's Day. The streets were very icy, and as a consequence great difficulty was experienced in making good time. Both brigades did well, but the Chemical Company had the first stream on the building.

Four young men from the country were in town on Christmas Day and had a big jollification. In the evening they undertook to run the Salvation Army in a style peculiarly their own. The lady captain objected to their conduct and had them summoned before Mr. F. G. Dunbar. The case came off on Monday afternoon when they were each fined $1.00 and costs. This will no doubt teach them a lesson to conduct themselves properly in future.—Free Press.

THE YEAR'S FAILURES.

NEW YORK, January 3.—The failures in 1889 numbered 10,882 in the United States or one in every 97 firms, and 1,777 in Canada, or one in every 45 firms. In 1888 the failures were 10,679 in the United States, and 1,677 in Canada. The aggregate of liabilities was $143,784,337 in the United States, against $123 829,973 in 1888, and $14,713,223 in Canada against $14,081,109. But the average of liabilities for each firm failing was lower in Canada $8,279 last year against $8,396 in 1888, and the increase in the United States, if an unfavorable indication, was still not enough to denote an unhealthy state of commercial credit, for the average in 1889 was but $13 672 against $11 592 in 1888, $17 392 in 1887 and $20,632 in 1886. The failures during the last seven days number for the United States 281, and for Canada 31, or a total of 332, against 298 last week, and 342 the week previous to the last. For the corresponding week of last year the figures were 387, representing 356 in the United States, and 28 in Canada.

Navigation is still open on the Detroit River.

James Swinton, a moulder, living in Hamilton, swallowed a fatal dose of laudanum in mistake for pain killer.

FOUND DEAD IN A SWAMP.

FERGUSON', Ont., Jan. 3.—The wife of Aaron Hethbrook a magistrate of the Township of Havelock, and ex-member of the Township Council, left her home on Christmas Eve while her husband was away, and, as nothing was heard of her, a search was instituted on Friday. The search proved futile until yesterday when a most ghastly discovery was made in a swamp about two miles from where the unfortunate woman lived. Lying beside a road was the lifeless body of Mrs. Hethbrook, presenting a pitiable and repulsive appearance. The mouth was open, the eyes sunken, and the expression pointed to a death from exposure and exhaustion. No bruises were found on the body except an abrasion of the skin on the leg. A coroner's jury returned a verdict of death from exposure.

A SERIOUS CHARGE.

Christmas Eve, George Sheehy, of the Central Hotel was arrested charged with committing rape upon one of his servants. He came up for trial before the police magistrate on Tuesday, and after considerable of the evidence was taken he was committed to stand his trial at the Spring Assizes, bail being refused by the magistrate. On his way to gaol, accompanied by the chief of police and constable Heron, he was permitted to go to his hotel for dinner, and the officers not keeping a sharp enough lookout on him, he gave them the slip through the back way, where a horse and buggy was all in readiness for his use. He jumped in and started up at full speed up the Catholic hill and towards Woodford. The horse and rig was below the second rock, but which direction the prisoner went was pretty hard to find out. The constables went immediately in search of their man, but up to the present time have failed to capture him.

Since the above was in type, we understand Sheehy was captured Wednesday morning at Proton station, by Constable Shouldice. The prisoner after leaving the horse below the second rock, went south to Rockford station, where he got into a box car and went as far as Proton station. He then went to his brother's hotel, where he was arrested by the officer, who was on the lookout for his man.—Owen Sound Advertiser.

The weakness and debility which result from illness may be speedily overcome by the use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla. This is a safe, but powerful tonic, assists digestion, regulates the liver and kidneys, and cleanses the blood of all germs of disease.

Harry Macdonald and John McCracken, two lads of 15, were arrested at Toronto on Saturday for firing at a railway train at Parkdale on Thursday afternoon. Three occupants of the car narrowly escaped being shot. The boys claim they were simply out practising.

The best anodyne and expectorant for the cure of colds and coughs and all throat, lung, and bronchial troubles, is, undoubtedly, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Ask your druggist for it, and, at the same time, for Ayer's Almanac, which is free to all.

Among the resolutions adopted by the Illinois State Grange is one in favor of taking a complete account of the mortgage indebtedness of the country in the census of 1890. The farmers of Illinois are ground sorely between the low prices of produce and the heavy rates of interest on their borrowings.

A report from Isle aux-Coudres, below Quebec, says that a remarkably large and strange fish was seen in the St Lawrence off there a few days since. It seemed to be from 18 to 20 feet long. An attempt was made by three young men to capture it, but it eluded their pursuit and disappeared. The fact that it was swimming with its dorsal fin over the surface of the water would seem, together with its size, to indicate that the strange visitor was a shark, and it is certainly not a pleasant reflection to think that such ugly customers can make their way so high up the river and so close to some of our most popular watering places, like Bay St. Paul, Murray Bay, River du Loup, Cacouna and Kamouraska.

Mrs. Payette, a squaw, who lives on the shore of Owen Sound Bay, at what is known as Payette's Point, started from her home the other afternoon, in a small sail boat for Cape Croker in company with her two nephews, sons of J. LaValle of that place, intending to spend New Year's there. All went well until they reached about the centre of the bay when a squall struck the little craft, capsizing it. All clung to the boat until they were near White Cloud Island, to which they were fast drifting. The woman, unable to hold on any longer, let go her hold, and was drowned a short distance from the island. The young men managed by strenuous efforts, to reach the island, more dead than alive.

A great deal has been said concerning the horrors of the Africa slave trade, but a German who has travelled widely in South and West Africa reports that in the west especially the slaves are just as well off as the masters. None of the conventional accessories of slavery exist there at all. There are no slave markets, no slave drivers, no chains and no scourging. Slaves and masters inhabit similar huts, eat similar food, and enjoy similar sports. They all wear the same kind of clothes, fish together from the same boats, and have the same marital rights. A stranger can live in a town many weeks without being able to learn by observation who of his neighbors are free and who are slaves. In most cases the question can be settled only by careful inquiry. The slaves have no desire to change their condition, the German traveller says. Twenty or thirty of them are often escorted from town to town by a couple of unarmed masters, yet they never make an effort to escape. They would not be free if they could. Should the Europeans buy their freedom from them, everything would remain exactly as it is, save that the masters would have the European's money. The slaves would not budge an inch out of present circumstances.

Sudden change.

MRS. GEORGE FLEWELLING, St. John, N. B., writes:—I suffered from weakness and costiveness, so I bought a bottle of Burdock Blood Bitters, and before I finished it I noticed a change. After using three bottles I am now entirely cured, and recommend B.B.B. as a positive cure for costiveness.

We are showing the newest patterns and latest designs in Dinner and Tea Sets, Hanging Lamps and Fancy Goods for the Christmas trade.

Prevailing Sickness.

THE most prevalent complaints at this season are rheumatism, neuralgia, sore throat, inflammation and congestion. For all these and other painful troubles, Hagyard's Yellow Oil is the best internal and external remedy.

Well Pleased.

DEAR SIRS,—I can recommend Hagyard's Yellow Oil as a sure cure for rheumatism. I had it for a long time, and was cured by two bottles, and I must say it is the best thing I can get for general use in a pain reliever.

The Favorite

Mixture for Coughs and Lung Difficulties, Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and Asthma; also a certain cure for Diseases of the Larynx and Lungs, and conditions the Vocal Organs. Its wonderful success in the Lungs presents Consumption, and, even in all such cases, relieves Cough, procures sound sleep. There is no other preparation can for disease of the throat and lungs to be compared with this wonderful medicine.

"My wife had an annoying cough, with pains in the chest and throat. We tried various remedies, but none did her any good until I got a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which soon cured her. A neighbor, who seemed, had the consumption, and was relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have no hesitation in recommending this medicine."

Cough Medicine

to every one is Robert Horton, Foreman *Herald*office, Morrilton, Ark.

"I have been afflicted with asthma for forty years. Last spring I was taken with a violent cough, which threatened to terminate my days. Every one presented me to consumption. I determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Its effects were magical. I was immediately relieved and continue to improve until entirely recovered."—Joel Bullard, Guilford, Conn.

"Six months ago I had a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, brought on by an incessant cough which deprived me of sleep and rest. I tried various remedies, but obtained no relief until I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. A few bottles of this medicine cured me."—Mrs. E. Colcord, 17 Second st., Lowell, Mass.

"For children afflicted with colds, coughs, sore throat, or croup, I do not know of any remedy which will give more speedy relief than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have found it also invaluable in cases of Whooping Cough."—Ann Lawson, 1216 Washington street, Boston, Mass.

CUPID'S HARNESS.

Most women naturally look forward to matrimony as their proper sphere in life, but they should constantly bear in mind that a fair, rosy face, bright eyes, and a healthy, well-developed form, are the best passports to a happy marriage. All those wasting diseases, weaknesses, and functional irregularities peculiar to their sex, destroy beauty and attractiveness and make life miserable. An unfailing specific for these maladies is to be found in Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrappers, and faithfully carried out for many years. $1.00 per Bottle, or Six Bottles for $5.00.

COLD IN HEAD — CATARRH — THE 4 STAGES. — CONSUMPTION — DEATH.

There is positive danger to health and life in neglecting a case of Cold in the Head or Catarrh, and at this season, with its changeable weather, unusual moisture and sudden changes from heat to cold the system is peculiar liability to cold in the head. A neglected case of Cold in the Head rapidly developes into Catarrh, and neglected Catarrh just as certainly developes into Consumption and leads to premature death. Medical testimony proves conclusively that a large percentage of all the deaths occurring from Consumption had their origin in a neglected Cold, which by rapid stages, developed into Catarrh, then into Consumption, that dread disease with which medical science is as yet unable to cope successfully. If you are suffering from Cold in the head, or from any of the symptoms of Catarrh, such as: bad breath, dull oppressive headache, dropping from the head into the throat, hawking and spitting, copious discharges from the nostrils, losing sense of smell, or taste becoming dull, hacking cough, or a general feeling of debility, husky voice, wheezing or cracking sound in your chest when breathing, a feeling of dizziness, particularly when stooping, a feeling of tiredness and indisposition to exertion, a feeling of nausea in the morning when attempting to dislodge accumulations in the throat. Do not neglect them. These are but a few of the many symptoms of Catarrh, and if you experience any, BE WARNED IN TIME. Do not permit them to run under the mistaken impression that the disease will eventually wear away. It will not, but on the contrary will wear you away as it has thousands before. Procure at once a bottle of NASAL BALM, the only certain and speedy cure ever offered to the public for Cold in the Head and Catarrh. This is no idle assertion, but an unquestionable fact, which is verified by thousands of testimonials in our possession telling of marvellous cures. These testimonials we have received from all parts of the Dominion, and we append a few, selected at random, as a fair sample of the whole:—

Mr. Alex. Burns, of Sudbury, Ont., says:—Gents, I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh for several eight years, and it was attended with consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears, and sickening pain in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm are sweet breath, stoppage of the droppings into the throat (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the "Balm" will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

James H. McLeod, Mink River Road, N. S., says:—I have tried other remedies for Catarrh, but received little or no good from them. Your NASAL BALM is certainly the BEST REMEDY I have tried, and all you claim for it. The fact that it is pleasant and convenient to use adds greatly to its value, but its chief worth lies in being a CERTAIN CURE for that unpleasant disease—Catarrh.

Wm. Chas. Hanley, postmaster, Spry Bay, N. S., says:—I submit the following to the public that any who may be afflicted may be benefited by the same remedy. Two bottles of your NASAL BALM has RESTORED to PERFECT HEALTH a four year old child of ours, suffering from Catarrh.

Henrietta Blackwell Parker, Ont., says:—Your NASAL BALM is the BEST REMEDY I have yet used for Catarrh. I can breathe more freely than before and my breath has regained its sweetness. I consider NASAL BALM a boon to the suffering.

Miss Maggie M. Martin, Terwood, P. A., says:—Through a friend in Canada I became acquainted with your NASAL BALM. I have suffered for years with Catarrh, and it is the first remedy from which I have experienced relief, and I feel certain it will cure me.

Miss Minnie McNairn, Mille Roches, Ont., says:—Your bottle of NASAL BALM did me much good. The pain in my head disappeared before I had used the bottle, and I find myself receiving the greatest benefit. I feel certain NASAL BALM will cure my Catarrh if its use is persevered in.

Mr. John H. Adams, merchant, Brantford, Ont., says:—I have used NASAL BALM for Catarrh, and found it to be a CERTAIN CURE.

W. A. Doyle, Beulah, Man., writes:—As a family medicine to check Catarrhal affections or Cold in the Head, NASAL BALM HAS NO EQUAL. We prize it highly.

Mr. Schlenzig, Toronto, says:—For a number of years my wife has been badly troubled with Catarrh. Dr ——— here promised to cure her, but after using his remedy for months she became worse and weaker than before, and I found that I had spent $36 for medical treatment that did no good. My wife then began to use NASAL BALM and has improved wonderfully, and she is better and stronger than for years. Your remedy has been in the market and you can use this as testimony.

Emilie Pellitier, Grenville, says:—I can scarcely find words to tell you how highly I prize NASAL BALM. Its effects in my case have been wonderful.

Alfred H. Dales, Tarbert, Ont., writes:—Your NASAL BALM has made a new man of me. I never used a remedy so satisfactory.

A CAUTION:—Beware of Imitations. If your dealer has not got NASAL BALM in stock do not let him persuade you to take any other remedy which he may say is just as good, but send direct to the undersigned and it will be sent you on receipt of price—50 cents and $1.00 per bottle.

THE SUN

FOR

1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN's opinions about men and things, and some people don't; everybody likes to get bold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose, it is not THE SUN's fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out with THE SUN.

CITY CHURCH CHOIR.

Father and me not gettin' old,
We drove round to the way
Of gettin' to hear the singin', stand
Up greatest Sabbath day.

So there we be, with Andrew's hairs,
An' Sunday therein' coats,
We d'passed we'd hear the word and jine
In the sweet hymns they sang.

An' when we drove in thro' the aisle,
'Neath arched an' fluted stone
A ray of light touched father's hair
An' his worn features shone.

The organ's grand an' solemn tunes
Just sounded like a prayer,
An' when it stopped I seemed to feel
Wings beatin' through the air.

"The prodigal" the preacher said,
"Of sinnin' many years,
Has left the swine an' now has turned
His face towards his home."

Then all at once the choir riz;
It almost made me laugh
To hear that young soprany shriek,
"Bring in the fatted calf!"

"Bring in the fatted calf, the calf,"
Implored the alto low,
An' all the rest jined in, as if
They couldn't let it go.

The tenor's pleadin' touched my heart;
A critter'd been a stone
Not to hev come a-friskin' in
In answer to that tone.

We'al, pa, he sat with eyes cross bent,
Like I'd hev touched with snow
A-growin' round some sheany lake,
Half hidin' its blue glow.

But when the bass had started in
A-calin' for that calf,
He jist reached for his han'kerchief
To cover up a laugh.

"Bring in the fatted, fatted calf,"
Bellowed the bass; an' stars!
Our grandson John called (half asleep),
"Grandpa, let down the bars!"

INFLUENZA.

If, when you sit down to eat
Though the viands all are luscious,
Naught your appetite can meet—
You are caught beyond retreat
By the scourage of all the Russias.

If you feel within your bones,
Like a knife blade sharp and thin,
Harder than good razor bones
Pains that makes you utter groans—
'Tis the trouble from Berlin.

If your years are rather riper,
Yet your head a fullness harries,
Twining, biting like a viper—
'Tis "La Grippe," the grievous griper,
That has just arrived from Paris.

If something, though just what you know not,
Makes you wish to stay at home;
To employment forth you go not,
Entertains you every show not—
'Tis the fever known at Rome.

If you feel still strangely sick,
As if life with all fun done;
Headaches harder than a brick,
Atmosphere itself seems thick;
'Tis an English rheum from London.

If to read you are not able,
Titles you novelist or poet;
Lies unopened on your table
"Latest by Atlantic cable"—
'Tis the torture from Detroit.

If the earth about you whirls
As if ocean wave you tossed on;
If your writing takes queer quirls,
If your eyes discharge pearls—
'Tis the local plague of Boston.

If no words your woes describe,
But you long to fret and scold;
With your troubles held the tribe
That indulges in a gibe—
Worry not! you have a cold.

SUNBEAMS.

Where hot retorts are plentiful—in a gas-house.

A "short" speech—"Lend me a quarter till to morrow."

To get to be an octogenarian be virtuous and chop wood.

If a lovely woman smacks me on on one cheek I will turn her the other also.

When a woman wants the earth, it is with the view of giving it to some man.

Good resolutions are attached to the wrong end of the vice resolved against.

It is certainly bad policy to jump on a man before he is down. He may turn on you.

The trouble with men who go to the devil is that they continue to stay with us.

It will be remembered that we predicted the year 1890 as much as six months ago.

A young man whose girl went back on him says that he suffers from heart failure.

The fashionable woman in the forties is not generally ambitious to discover a new wrinkle.

Every once in a while the banana peel looms up as a sad reminder of the roller-skating craze.

A woman is never so badly in love that she does not try to find out the cost of her engagement ring.

The Russian "grippe" and the McGinty crase are moving this way, hand in hand. The people had better take to the woods.

The most popular publication of the day is a work in twelve chapters, entitled, "Calendar for 1890."

A Bainbridge girl writs to ask what a demi train is. It is almost what a man says when he misses a train.

Bashfulness is very becoming sometimes to a young man, but it is well for him to get over it if he is going to board.

Every man ought to be as good as his word. Nothing is expected of those who never have a good word for anybody.

First cost of paint—"How long have you been here?" Second coat of paint—"I came to day. "I thought you looked fresh."

Mamma—"Don't let me speak to you again, Tommy." Tommy—"You bet I wouldn't if I knew how to stop you."

He got the quarter.—"If I gave you a cent, Bobbie, what would you do with it?" "I'd buy a postal card and write to you for a quarter."

On Lake Michigan's Shore:—Judge—Are you a married man? Prisoner—I don't know. I haven't been home for ten days.

When you see a man who kisses his children in public, you may be pretty sure that he keeps the seats of their pantaloons well dusted at home.

The way to keep a husband at home evenings is to give him the baby to hold just for a minute, then skip out and go over to mother's and spend the evening.

Young lady, to editor—I have such a pretty little story with me. Can you use it? Editor. Oh, certainly; we can use anything here. (To office boy) Jimmy put a few more manuscripts in the stove; the room is growing cold.

First young Lady of Distinction—"My ancestors come to this country a hundred and thirty years ago." Second Young Lady of Distinction—"Mine did not find it necessary to come to this country at all."

Marital Recriminations.—Mrs. Oldboy—"Oh, you needn't talk, John. You were bound to have me. You can't say that I ever ran after you." Oldboy—"Very true, Maria, and the trap never runs after the mouse, but it gathers him in all the same."

Teacher—"Johnny, where is the North pole?" Johnny:—"I don't know." Teacher:—"Don't know where the North Pole is?" Johnny:—"When Dr. Kane and Franklin and Parry hunted for it and couldn't find it, how am I to know where it is?"

Clocks, the best timekeepers, at low prices at Fox's. tf

Bloboon, who has caught his wife extracting some change from his trousers pocket:—"Look here! What are you doing with that money?"—Mrs. Bloboon:—"I—I was just shining up the silver, and I thought you might like to have this polished too."

$500 Reward for an incurable case of chronic Nasal Catarrh is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy.

Tucker—"Why do I look so troubled? Well, last night I dreamed I died and was buried, Barker, and I saw the tombstone at the head of my grave." Parker—"Saw your tombstone, eh? And what of it?" "Why, I'm trying to live up to the epitaph I saw on it."

Spectacles, all kinds and prices, properly fitted at Fox's. tf

Niggs—"I always make it a rule to conceal nothing from my wife; I tell her everything." Biggs—"Yes, and I can't say that I like you for it." Niggs—"How so? Why not?" Biggs—"Why your wife tells everything you tell her to my wife, and my wife just hauls me over the coals for it."

Unsightly pimples, blotches, tan and all itching humors of the skin are removed by using Dr. Low's Sulphur Soap.

The Child of the 20th Century—Father:—"Robert, is it not about time that little boys were abed?" Robert aged six (carelessly glancing at his watch—"Really, father, I must be excused from venturing an opinion. It is a subject in which I have little interest; I have no little boys, you know."

If You have a Cough,

DO NOT neglect it. It should be loosened as soon as possible, and to do this nothing excels Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam. Obstinate coughs yield at once to its expectorant, soothing and healing properties, while cold, hoarseness, whooping cough, asthma, etc., are promptly relieved by its perfect action on the bronchial tubes.

IRON SHIPS AND LIGHTNING.—The Electrical Review points out that although the modern man of war is not the thing of beauty presented by its prototype, it has one advantage at least not possessed by "the wooden walls of old England." The advantage is found in the very few occasions which are recorded upon which the iron clad ships are struck by lightning. It cannot be said that the modern vessels are actually exempt from injury by lightning, but they are so far protected by their construction that when struck the results are trivial, and have often, in fact, been ascribed to the mischievous action of some one on board the vessel. In the old days it was very different; during a period of fifty years two hundred ships of our navy were struck by lightning, and in one case five vessels were struck during a single night, the number of fatalities resulting therefrom being considerable.—Chambers's Journal.

CATARRH,

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 303 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

Worn Out and Run Down.

BY disease and debility the human system becomes worn out and run down before its time. Keep the head clear, the bowels regular, the blood pure, the kidneys and liver active by the use of Burdock Blood Bitters, nature's great tonic and regulator, and disease can not exist.

HOSPITAL REMEDIES. $1
WILL GIVE YOU
HEALTH!
A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE.

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throughout the world studying under the professors in attendance. The most established practitioners, the ablest minds and practice here, and the institutions are storehouses of remedies. Prof. Radway, with a view of making this experience available to the public, the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, put in the reach of the poor the specifics are offered at the price of ten cents per package, which proved that food the market and absurdly cheap in its cure every ill from a single bottle. The result always fulfil for a reliable cure of chronic remedies is now filled with perfect satisfaction. The Hospital Remedies make no unreasonable claims. The specific for CATARRH cures that and nothing else; so with the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLES; RHEUMATISM is cured by No. 3, while troubles of DIGESTION, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their own cure. To these is added a specific for FEVER and AGUE, one for FEMALE WEAKNESS—a RENOVAL TONIC and BLOOD MAKER that makes old and wives FURR AND FULNESS, and an incomparable remedy for NERVOUS DEBILITY.

VOICES.

A man died yesterday night. Today the town
Makes mention of his taking off and sums
His virtues and his failings. On the street,
Midst many partnerings and leaves of taste,
In homes where he was known, in busy mart
Of public places where the commonweal
Gathers the town talk, up and down his name
Is spoken of in as various ways of speech
As are the voices various standing in
Griff through it—base, shrill treble of old age,
Soft sibilancy of a woman's tongue,
Or rough like utterance of a little child.
Thus one, his mate in business (with a shrewd
Dry head was that) much loss to us, much does,
And as for "heart"—a lee shrug of shoulders now—
"Well, 'tis but little quoted here on change."
Another, who had summered with him were
In leisure time—"A hightoned fellow gone!
'Tis true, he liked his ease; but who does not?
For me, give me the man that Horace loved
Who deemed it wise to feel when reasonable,"
A tiny one who oft had found great store
Of sweetmeats in his hand, and, prized far less,
Great store of kindness within his heart,
"Oh, won't he come to see us any more?"
His surplice pastor, bound to save his soul,
Balanced a bit by inconsistencies
He thought he saw, in private to his wife:
"Alas, poor soul! if only he had grasped
That matter of the creed and made us sure!
But then his heart was right, and God is good."
And one, a woman, who had found his arms
An all protecting shelter through long years,
Said naught, but kissed the tokens he had left,
And dreamt of heaven for his sake alone.
Meanwhile, what was this man, and what his place?
You ask, confused by all this Babel talk
Of here and yonder, from his fellow men.
I am as ignorant as any one
Whose speech you heard, and yet I loved him well.
Nay, ask me not; ask only God. He knows.

THE MILL MYSTERY.

CHAPTER XV.

A GOSSIP.

This something settled matter in his heart,
Whereon his brains still beating, puts him thus
From fashion of himself.

—HAMLET.

I HAD not taken this tone with both my correspondents without a secret hope of being able to do something myself towards the establishment of Mr. Pollard's innocence. Now, I could not very plainly perceive that day or next, but as time elapsed and my brain cleared and my judgement returned, I at last saw the way to an effort which might not be without consequences of a satisfactory nature. What that effort was you may perhaps conjecture from the fact that the first walk I took was in the direction of the cottage where Mr. Barrows had formerly lived. The rooms which he had occupied were for rent, and my ostensible errand was to hire them. The real motive of my visit, however, was to learn something more of the deceased clergyman's life and ways than I then knew; if happily out of some hitherto unnoticed event in his late history I might receive a hint which should ultimately lead me to the solution of the mystery which involving my happiness

I was not an unsuccessful in this attempt as one might anticipate. The lady of the house was a gossip, and the subject of Mr. Barrows' death was an inexhaustible topic of interest to her. I had but to mention his name, and straightway a tide of words flowed from her lips, which, if mostly words contained here and there intimations of certain facts which I felt was well enough for me to know, even if they not amount to anything like an explanation of the tragedy. Among these was one which only my fear of showing myself too much interested in her theme prevented me from probing to the bottom. This was, that for a month at least before his death Mr. Barrows had seemed to her like a changed man. A month—that was about the interval which had elapsed between his first visit to the mill and his last; and the evidence that he showed an alteration of demeanor in that time might have its value and might not. I resolved to cultivate Mrs. Simpson's acquaintance, and sometime put her a question or two that would satisfy me upon this point.

This determination was all the easier to make in that I found the rooms I had come to see sufficiently to my liking to warrant me in taking them. Not that I should have hesitated to do this had they been as unattractive as they were pleasant. It was not their agreeableness that won me, but the fact that Mr. Barrows' personal belongings had not yet been removed, and that for a short time at least I should find myself in possession of his library, and face to face with the same articles of taste and study which had surrounded him in his lifetime, and helped to mould, if not make the man. I should thus obtain a knowledge of his character, and some day, who knows, might flash upon this secret. For that he possessed one, and was by no means the plain and simple character I had been led to believe, was a point to me from the first glimpse I had of these rooms; there being no one object that marked his taste a certain individuality and purpose that betrayed a strong and active soul; one that could hide itself, perhaps, beneath a practical exterior, but which, in ways like this, must speak, and speak loudly too, of its own inward promptings and tendency.

The evening when I first thought these objects under a clear and consecutive scrutiny, was a memorable one to me. I had moved in early that day, and with a woman's unreasoning caprice had forborne to eat more than the most cursory glance around, being content to see that all was as I had left it at my first visit, and that neither desk nor library had been disturbed. But when supper was over, and I could set myself with free mind to a contemplation of my new surroundings, I found that my curiosity could no longer delay the careful tour of inspection to which I felt myself lured by the freshness and beauty of the pictures, and one or two of the statuettes which adorned the walls about me. One painting in especial attracted me, and made me chose for my first contemplation that side of the room on which it hung. It was a copy of some French painting, and represented the temptation of a certain saint. A curious choice of subject, you may think, to adorn a Protestant clergyman's wall, but if you could have seen it, and marked the extreme expression of mortal struggle on the face of the tempted, who, with eyes shut, and hands clutching till it bent the cross of twigs stuck in the crevices of the rocks beneath which he writhed, waited for the victory over self that was just beginning to cast its light upon his brow, you would have felt that it was good to hang before the eyes of any one in whom conflict of any kind was waging. Upon me the effect was instantaneous; and so (real that I have never been able that I have never been able to think of that moment without a sense of awe and rending of the heart. Human passion assumed a new significance in my mind, and the will and faith of a strong man suffering from its power, yet withstanding it to the very last grasp by the help of his trust in God, rose to such an exalted position in my mind, that I felt then, as I feel now whenever I remember this picture, that my whole moral nature had received, from its contemplation, an impetus towards religion and self denial. While I was still absorbed in gazing at it, my landlady entered the room, and seeing me posed before the picture, quite sympathizingly exclaimed:

"Isn't that a dreadful painting, Miss Sterling, to have in any one's room? I don't wonder Mr. Barrows wanted to cover it up."

Cover it up?" I repeated, turning hastily in my surprise.

"Yes," she replied, going to a drawer in his desk and taking out a small engraving, which she brought me. "For nearly a month before his death he had this picture stuck up over the other with pins. You can see the pin-holes now, if you look; they went right through the canvas. I thought it a very sensible thing to do, myself; but when I spoke of it to him one day, remarking that I had always thought the picture unfit for anyone to see, he gave me such a look that I thought then he must be crazy. But no one else saw anything amiss in him, and, as I did not want to lose a good lodger, I let him stay on, though my mind did sometimes misgive me."

The engraving she had handed me was almost as suggestive as the painting it had been used to conceal; but at this remarkable statement from Mrs. Simpson's lips I laid it quietly down.

"You think he was crazy?" I asked.

"I think he committed suicide," she affirmed.

I turned to the engraving again, and took it up. What a change had come over me that a statement against which I had once so honestly rebelled for Ada's sake should now arouse something like a sensation of joy in my breast!

Mrs. Simpson, too much interested in her theme to notice me, went confidently on.

"You see, folks that live in the same house with a person, learn to know them as other folks can't. Not that Mr. Barrows ever talked to me; he was a deal too much absorbed in his studies for that; but he ate at my table, and went in and out of my front door, and of a woman cannot learn something about a man under those circumstances, then she is no good, that is all I have to say about her."

I was amused and slightly startled, but the needed encouragement to proceed.

"The way he would drop into a brown study over his meat and potatoes was a caution to my mind. A minister that don't eat is—as anomoly," she burst out, "I have boarded them before, and I know they like the good things of life as well as anybody. But Mr. Barrows, lately at least, never seemed to see what was on the table before him, but ate because his plate of food was there, and had to be disposed of in some way. One day, I remember in particular, I had baked dumplings, for he used to be very fond of them, and could eat two without any urging; but this day he either did not get enough much of them, or else his whole appetite had changed, for he suddenly looked down at his plate and shuddered, almost as if he were in mental, and, getting up, was going away, when I remembered, up courage to ask if the dumplings were not as good as usual. He turned at the door—I can see him now,—and mechanically shaking his head, seemed to be trying to utter some apology. But he presently stopped in that attempt, and, pointing at the table, said, in his accustomed tone, "You need not make me any more dumplings, Mrs. Simpson. I shall not indulge in them in the future": and went out, without saying whether he was sick or what. And that was the end of the dumplings, and of many a good thing besides."

"And is that all—" I began; but she broke in before the words were half out of my mouth.

"But the strangest thing I ever saw in him was this. I have not said much about it, for the people that went to his church are a high and mighty lot, and wouldn't bear a word said against his sanity, even by one as had more opportunities than they of knowing him. But you are a stranger in town, and can't have no such foolish touchiness about a person that is nothing to you, so I will just tell you all about it. You see, when he had visitors—and off and on a good many came—I used to seat them in the parlor below, till I was sure he was ready to receive them. This had happened one evening, and I had gone up to his door, to notify him that a stranger was down stairs, when I heard such a peculiar noise issuing from his room, that I just stood stock still on the door mat to listen. It was a swishing sound, followed by a—Miss Sterling," she suddenly broke in, in a half awe struck, half frightened, tone, "did you ever hear any one whipped? If you have you will know why I stood shuddering at that door full two minutes before I dared lift my hand and knock. Not that I could believe Mr. Barrows was whipping any body, but the sound was so like it, and I was so certain besides that I had heard something like a smothered oath follow it, that nothing short of the most imperative necessity would have given me the courage to call him; my imagination filling the room with all sorts of frightful images; images that did not fade away in a hurry," she went on, with a look of shrinking terror about her which I am not sure was not reflected in my own face, "when, after the longest waiting I ever had at his door, he slowly came across the room and opened it, showing me a face as white as a sheet, and a hand that trembled so that he dropped the card I gave him and to pick it up. Had there been a child there——"

"But there wasn't!" I interrupted shocked and forced to defend him in spite of myself.

"No, nor anybody else. For when he went down downstairs, I looked and there was no one there, and nothing uncommon about the room, except that I thought his bookcase looked as if it had moved. And it had; for next day when I swept this room—it did not need sweeping, but one can't wait for ever to satisfy their curiosity—I just looked behind that case, and what do you think I found? A strap—a regular leather strap—just such as——"

"Good God!" I interrupted; "you do not think he had been using it when you went to the door?"

"I do," she said. "I think he had a fit of something like insanity upon him, and had been swinging that strap—Well, I will not say against what, for I do not know, but might it not have been against the fiends and goblins with which crazy people sometimes imagine they are surrounded?"

"Possibly," I acquiesced, though my time could not have been one of any strong conviction.

"Insane persons sometimes do strange things," she continued; "and that he did not show himself violent before folks is no sign he did not let himself go sometimes when he was alone. The very fact that he restrained himself when he went into the pulpit and visited among his friends, may have made him wilder when he got by himself. I am sure I remembered having heard of a case where a man lived for ten years in a town without a single neighbor suspecting him of insanity, yet his wife suffered constantly from his freaks, and finally fell a victim to his violence."

"But Mr. Barrows was such a brilliant man," I objected. "His sermons up to the last are models of eloquence."

"Oh, he could preach," she assented. Seeing that she was not to be moved in her convictions, I ventured upon a few questions.

"Have you ever thought," I asked, "what it was that created such a change in him? You say you noticed it for I am sth before his death, could anything have happened to disturb him at that time?"

"Not that I know of," she answered, with great readiness. "I was away for a week in August, and it was when I first came back that I observed how different he was from what he had been before. I thought at first it was the hot weather, but heat don't make one restless and unfit to sit quiet in one's chair. Nor does it drive a man to work as if the very evil one was in him, keeping the light burning unnecessarily till two in the morning, while he wrote and walked, and walked and wrote, till I thought my head would burst with sympathy for him."

"He was finishing a book, was he not? I think I have heard he left a completed manuscript behind him?"

"Yes; and I don't think it very singular that the last word should have been written, and the whole parcel done up, and sent away to his publisher, two days before his death, if he had not known what was going to happen?"

"And was it?" I inquired.

"Yes, it was; for I was in the room when he signed his name to it, and heard his sigh of relief, and saw him, too, when a little while afterwards, he took the bundle out to the post office. I remember thinking, "Well, now for some rest night!" little imagining what rest was in store for him, poor soul!"

"Did you know that Mr. Barrows was engaged?" I suddenly asked, unable to restrain my impatience any longer.

"No, I did not," she rather sharply replied as if her lack of knowledge on that subject had been rather a sore point with her. "I may have suspected there was some one he was interested in, but I am sure nobody ever imagined her as being the one. Poor girl she must have thought a heap of him to die in that way."

She looked at me as she said this, anticipating perhaps, a return of the confidences she had made me. But I could not talk of this to her, and after a moment of silent waiting she went eagerly on.

"Perhaps a lover's quarrel lay at the bottom of the whole matter," she suggested. "Miss Reynolds was a sweet girl and loved him very devotedly, of course; but they might have had a tiff for all that, and in a nature as sensitive as his, the least thing will sometimes unhinge the mind.

But I would only shake my head at this; the supposition, was at once too painful and absurd.

"Well, well," the garrulous woman went on in no wise abashed, "there are some things that come hard. Why Mr. Barrows went the way he did is one of the hard things to understand, but that he did go, and that of his own frenzied will, I am as sure that two and two make four, and four from four leaves nothing."

I thought of all the others who secretly or openly expressed the same opinion, and felt my heart grow lighter. Then I thought of Rhoda Colwell, and then——

"Just what time was it," I asked, "when you were away in August? Was it before the seventh, or after? In inquired, because——"

But evidently she did not care why I inquired.

"It was during that week," she broke in. "I remember because it was on the sixteenth that Mr. Pollard died, and I was not here to attend the funeral. I came back——"

But it was no matter to me now when she came back. She had not been at home the night when Mr. Barrows was beguiled into his first visit to the mill, and she had mentioned a name I had long been eager to have introduced into the conversation.

"You knew Mr. Pollard?" I therefore interrupted without ceremony. "He was a very rich man, was he not?"

"Yes; she assented. "I suppose the children will have the whole property, now that the old lady is gone. I hope Mr. Harrington will be satisfied. He just married that girl for her money. That, I am sure, you will hear everybody say."

"Yet she is exceedingly pretty," I suggested.

"Oh, yes, too pretty; she makes one think of a wax doll. But these English lords don't care for beauty without there is a deal of hard cash to back it, and if Agnes Pollard had been as poor as—what other beauty have we in town?"

"There is a girl called Rhoda Colwell," I ventured.

"Rhoda Colwell! Do you call her a beauty? I know some folks think she is—well, then, let us say of Rhoda Colwell, he would have made her any proposal sooner than that of his hand."

"And is Mr. Harrington a lord?" I asked, feeling that I was lighting upon some very strange truths.

"He is the next heir to one. A nephew, I believe, or else a cousin. I cannot keep track of all those fine distinctions in people I never see."

"They were married privately and right after Mr. Pollard's death, I have heard."

"Yes, and for no other earthly reason that one ever heard of than to have it settled and done; for Mr. Harrington did not take away his wife from the country; yet does he travel too far to I can learn. Everybody thought it a very strange proceeding, and none too respectful to Mr. Pollard's memory either."

I thought of all I had heard and seen in that house, and wondered.

"Mr. Pollard was such a nice man, too," she pursued, in a musing tone. "Not a commanding, person like his wife, but as good and kind and attentive too poor folks like me. I never liked a man more than I did Mr. Pollard, and I have always thought that if he had a different kind of mother for his children—but what is the use of pitying the poor woman now. She is dead and so is he, and the children will do very well, now with all that money, to look back to in any sorrow they may have."

"You seem to know them well," I remarked, fearing she would observe the emotion I could not quite keep out of my face.

"No," she returned, with an assumption of grimness, which was evidently meant for sarcasm, "not well, "Every one knows the Pollards, but I never heard any one say they knew them well."

"Didn't Mr. Barrows?" I tremblingly inquired, anxious for her reply, yet fearful of connecting those two names.

"Not that I ever saw," she returned, showing no special interest in the question, or in the fact that it was seemingly of some importance to me.

"Didn't they use to come here to see him?" I proceeded, emboldened by her evident lack of perspicuity. "None of them?" I added, seeing her about to shake her head.

"Oh, Dwight and Guy would come here if they had any business with him," she allowed. "But that isn't intimacy; the Pollards are intimate with nobody."

She seemed to be rather proud of it, and as I did not see my way just then to acquire any further information, I sank with a weary air into a chair, turning the conversation as I did so upon other and totally irrelevant topics. But no topic was of much interest to her, that did not in some way involve Mr. Barrows; and after a few moments of desultory chat, she pleaded the excuse of business and hurriedly left the room.

"La Grippe" or Lightning Catarrh.

MR EDITOR,—"La Grippe," or Russian influenza, as it is termed, is in reality an epidemic catarrh, and is called by some physicians "lightning catarrh," from the rapidity with which it sweeps over the country. Allow us to draw the attention of your readers to the fact that Nasal Balm, as well as been a thorough cure for all cases of the ordinary cold in head and catarrh, will give prompt relief in even the most severe cases of "la grippe" or "Russian influenza," as it will effectually clear the nasal passages, allay irritation and relieve the dull, oppressive headache accompanying the disease. No family should be without a bottle of Nasal Balm in the house, as cold in the head and catarrh are peculiarly liable to attack people at this season of the year, and Nasal Balm is the only prompt and speedy cure for these troubles ever offered the public. Easy to use and agreeable. If you cannot get it at your dealers it will be sent post free on receipt of price (50 cents and $1 per bottle) by addressing

HE DIDN'T PRONOUNCE IT THAT WAY.

An old fellow from the country, who has plenty of money, invested some of it in an uptown hotel of the family sort, was approached on the first day of opening it by a natty young man with a debonair smile.

"Have you any rooms en suite?" he asked.

"Any what?" inquired the new landlord.

"Rooms en suite."

"See here, young man, how many of them are you?" asked the granger.

"Just me and Mamie—I mean my wife. We—we haven't been married long. She sent me around to see if you had any suites."

"Well, you go home and tell her to come right along. We've got plenty of rooms, and when you and she are in them they'll be too sweet for anything. If we haven't got rooms in sweets we'll have sweets in rooms. Come again, young feller."

Cautious Investor—"How do you get this natural gas anyhow?" Officer of the company—"We bore a hole in the ground till we strike a pocket of gas. Then we run it through pipes to the houses of consumers." "But mightn't somebody else bore down and strike the same pocket?" "Not in our vicinity. We own all the land for miles." "Got a good title?" "Been examined by the best lawyers in the country and pronounced perfect." "Any lawyers in your company?" "I think we have not less than six and some of them own large amounts of stock." (Buttoning up his coat.) "Six lawyers and only one pocket! I've got no money to put in it, I guess."

CATARRH,

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER

A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact. As the result of this discovery a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

Dr. Low's Worm Syrup has removed tape worms from 15 to 30 feet long. It also destroys all other kinds of worms.

TO OUR PATRONS.

NO SUN NEXT WEEK.—The usual custom of a country newspaper is to take a holiday once a year, so next week we will take ours. Each week last year THE SUN made its appearance, and did not take a day off. We hope our readers will excuse us for thus depriving them of Dufferin's fire, local paper but happily its only for one week. The office however, will remain open for the transaction of business.

CARDWELL.

HAMILTON LENNOX, Dr. Law, and M. Scanlon, are said to be quite anxious to bear the standard in Cardwell. They didn't show up for a tackle with Cardwell before Mr. Mowat gerrymandered it into a tory hive. Mr. Hammell, our present popular member, in years gone by rolled up his sleeves and went manfully into what was almost a forlorn hope, and at heavy pecuniary loss added Cardwell to the list of Conservative ridings. We think ingratitude would be a very mild term for an action of the electorate that would give the nomination to a fair weather friend, now that a candidate has nothing to do but occupy the seat.

We trust that Mr. Hammell's friends will see that no amount of political wire-pulling will succeed in turning the nomination from our present member. The man who fights and obtains victory has a right to wear the laurel.—Cardwell Sentinel.

Mr. Hammell is a friend to every elector of Cardwell, and when they have a good man they know enough to keep him. THE SUN has every reason to believe that the present M. P. P. will be re elected by acclamation.

GREAT BRITAIN AND THE WHEAT CROP.

FROM the last report of the Treasury department of the United States on foreign commerce we gather data of interest concerning our wheat crop, the wheat crops of the world and their disposition.

The crop of 1888 in the United States was 415,868,000 bushels. In Canada 32,000,000, Great Britain and Ireland 76,760,671, Russia 254,619,000, India 268,882,112, Australia 47,588,167, Hungary 131,746,879 and France 273,620,125. The United Kingdom of Great Britain is one of the greatest purchasers of wheat in the world. Of the amount she bought in 1887 the United States furnished 61.45 per cent, British India 11.52 per cent, Australia 1.83 per cent British North America 6.67 per cent, and Russia 6.51 per cent.

In one year, however, the falling off was very great, and in 1888 the United States furnished only 36.69 per cent of the wheat imported into the Kingdom of Great Britain. Over against this, Russia's increase of sales to British consumers was from 7.57 per cent to 29.22 per cent, and Australasia's from 1.83 to 3.15 per cent.

In other words the British importation of American wheat in 1887 of 4,539,067,800 pounds fell in 1888 to 2,720,221,200 pounds, and Russia got the lion's share of the difference. The crop in Russia, however, was larger than ever before. It is with great satisfaction that Americans may notice the continuous prosperity of this feature of our agriculture. In round numbers, beginning with 1885, our annual yield of wheat has been, in million bushels; 357; 457; 456; 416. At the same time in France the figures, in millions of bushels have been decreasing as follows: 313; 292; 312; 274. In Russia the increase is as follows; 209; 214; 224; 255; India, 286; 258; 239; 267, a decrease; Australasia, 37; 32; 35; 48, an increase: These figures show how complicated are the influences which govern the natural market of our great wheat product as affected by foreign consumption and by foreign competition. In the natural order of things we can hardly expect much change from existing conditions in foreign supply and demand. But we have a right to expect at home both increased yield and increased consumption.—Albany Journal.

"La grippe," although unscientific as medical nomenclature now goes, is none the less so than "influenza" or "fashionable fever" or "sheep cough" or "the crowning disease" or "the lightning catarrh" or "the little courier" or "the frolicsome disease," by all of which terms it has been known in the past. "La grippe," which according to Birmer, comes from gripper (to seize), and according to another authority from the Polish word Chrypka, which means hoarseness, seems to suit the newspapers and the people.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

La grippe is still the popular disease.

THE citizens of Toronto are grumbling about the impure water they are receiving lately.

THE influenza is raging in Hamilton, and the physicians say there was ever a thousand cases in that city.

THE Conservatives of South Grey have nominated Mr. John Blythe, M. P. P., for the local legislature.

THE unusual sinking of a piece of a road in Ohio increased the value of the adjoining farms $4 50 an acre, while the cost was less than $1 an acre. Some one ought to go all through this country preaching the gospel of good roads.

SOME negroes who served the Union Army well in the late civil war, were denied admission to posts by the Grand Army of the Republic in New Orleans, secured charters and organized posts of their own. The white veterans object, and it is said that one of their chief officials has resigned. Thus men who were willing to lay down their lives to free the slaves are unwilling to make the smaller sacrifice of admitting them to fellowship in a society of veterans.

Cleopatra died 1,920 years ago, and her tomb has just been discovered. It is an interesting find, but a dismal one. It is hard to think of Cleopatra as a mummy; but if the asp were embalmed also, many curious speculations may be set at rest by an examination of its remains. Now, perhaps we shall find out whether Cleopatra was an Egyptian or a Greek—whether her beauty, which age could not wither nor custom stale, consisted of that flat nose, thick lips and sooty complexion, or a Grecian profile and a skin of milk and rose. Even in a mummy the form of the features can be traced.

Besides the influenza Europe is threatened with an epidemic which has probably never before invaded its territory. It has its cradle in the peninsula of Ganges, and it is called the red fever of India. It is an eruptive malady disclosing some of the characteristics of measles and scarlatina. There are in reality two eruptions—one initial and the other final. The attack is sudden, with weakness, lassitude, pain in the head, and affected eyes, and then the first eruption appears in the form of red blotches, as in scarlatina. The final eruption becomes apparent from the fourth to the sixth day, and resembles that of measles, affecting the feet, hands and the limbs, and disappearing in its turn after a duration of twenty-four hours. Convalescence is rather slow. The disease has hitherto been confined chiefly to Asia, but it has recently appeared at Constantinople and at Prevesa. It is extremely contagious, but the lateness of the season may prevent its general spread through Europe.

TO SAVE A GIRL'S LIFE.

NEW YORK, January 13.—Last November Amos A Lincoln, a fireman, came to New York from Philadelphia and, with excellent letters of recommendation, secured work. Shortly afterwards he was taken sick with a nervous disease, and was admitted to the New York hospital. On January 6, Lizzie Cunningham was brought to the hospital unconscious and suffering from asphyxiation. She continued unconscious until Thursday night, when the physician decided that a transfusion of blood might save her life.

Lincoln offered himself as a subject. Four incisions were made in his arms, and the blood was passed into the veins of the unconscious girl. It was found that during the operation he had lost two pounds of blood.

The success of experiment was doubtful, for there was no notable improvement Friday or Saturday. Last night, however, the girl was pronounced much better, although still in a dangerous condition.

CANADA'S COMIC PAPER.

GRIP begins its thirty-fourth volume with the New Year, which means that this brave little journal has celebrated its seventeenth birthday. When we say—as we can without hesitation—that its ability both literary and artistic has been kept up to a uniformly high standard throughout this long period, and that today it is as bright as ever, we mention a fact exceedingly creditable, not only to the conductors of Grip, but also to the Canadian people, without whose appreciation and support this phenomenon of journalism would have been impossible. We call it a phenomenon advisedly, for so far as we are aware, there is not another country of Canada's age—certainly no other Colony—that can boast of a sixteen-year-old Comic Journal. Grip has well deserved its success. It is not merely a clever and amusing paper, it is also a recognized power in Canadian public life, and a power, which, we are glad to say, is always on the right side where questions of moral principle are concerned. It ought to be a pleasure to every Canadian to contribute to the success of such a journal,—and the most practical way of doing this is by subscribing. The price is only Two Dollars per year. Subscriptions may be sent direct to Grip, Toronto.

BOOTH & VOGAN.—A strong union has been recently formed in Toronto by Messrs. J. E. Booth and Jas. Vogan, who have leased the famous Revere house, on the corner of King and York streets. Both are experienced and successful hotel-men—the former being especially well known as the past proprietor of the Gordon house in Orangeville—while the latter ran the same business in grand style at Charlestown, Peel county, and also in the city. The Revere has a splendid stand, being only a short distance north of the Union station, thereby making it very convenient for travellers from this section. The house is now in better trim than ever for the reception and accommodation of guests, and being under the management of tried, and experienced men, we assure those who visit Toronto a first class house to stop at. We wish the new firm every success.

SUDDEN DEATH.—A sad death occurred at the Grand Trunk station yesterday afternoon just after the train from the east had arrived. Among the passengers who got off was a strong looking woman aged about 30 years, carrying a ten months old child in her arms. She had directed her trunk to be carried over to the C. P. R. station and was still on the station platform when she suddenly fell prostrate to the ground. Dr Pattullo, of Toronto and Dr. Moore who happened to be close at hand did all in their power to revive her but with out avail—death had claimed her. Inquiries discovered that the dead woman's name was Mrs. Stewart, of Shelburne, and that she had boarded the train at Malton having been on a visit to her brother in law Mr. Whitlock of Burnhamthorpe. Her friends in Shelburne were communicated with and the body was taken there by the evening train on the C. P. R. The poor little child was kindly taken charge of by Mr Homer and afterwards taken home to Shelburne on the same train which conveyed the inanimate form of its mother.—Brampton Banner.

DEATH OF MR. H. E. REID.

THE END OF AN INDUSTRIOUS LIFE.

THE SUN is called upon this week to announce to its readers the death of Mr. Hugh Edwin Reid, who died at his residence, Zina street, on Sunday morning last, at the early age of forty two years. For some time past Mr. Reid had been confined to his room by an attack of typhoid fever, but it was never imagined for a moment that his earthly career would terminate so abruptly.

Deceased was a thorough business man, well-liked by everybody, and hated by none. He is the sixth son of Mr. Thos. Reid, of the South ward, and was born in the township of Etobicoke, county of York, on March 3rd, 1847. In 1866 he removed to Orangeville and secured a position in the store of Mr. John Anderson, now registrar for North Wellington. He then went into the employ of K. Chisholm & Co., where he remained for eight years. After that Mr. Reid and Mr. Jno. Bookless entered into partnership, and conducted a large dry goods and grocery store, which the former gentleman ably managed until he was called away.

The funeral took place from his late residence on Monday to the Forest Lawn Cemetery, and was attended by a large concourse of people. The local lodges of the A. O. U. W., and the Masons were present in a body. A large number of beautiful floral offerings were presented. His loss is mourned by a widow and a small family, who have THE SUN a warmest sympathy in their sad bereavement.

AFTER MANY YEARS.—A Sault Ste. Marie despatch says:—A little girl has been living here with an aged couple as their adopted child. She was led to believe her natural parents dead. She has just received a letter from her mother, Mrs Anna Bradbury, Council Bluffs, Iowa, who informs her that the couple with whom she is living had abducted her when three years of age. She is now 18, and very happy over the outcome of her correspondence. The mother is now in her way here.

VICK'S FLORAL GUIDE.—We have received from James Vick, Rochester, N. Y., his Floral Guide, which in beauty of appearance and convenience of arrangement surpasses anything in this line which we have ever had the privilege of seeing before. It is a pamphlet eight by ten inches in size, and with covers, which are by no means the least important part of it, contains an even one hundred pages. Although called a "floral guide," it is devoted to vegetables as well, and includes as full a list and description of both flowers, vegetables and also small fruits as could be brought within the compass of a book of this size.

In all that the Vick's have undertaken their aim seems to have been to attain as near to absolute perfection as possible, and probably no one ever did so much towards bringing the cultivation of flowers to the high standard which it has now attained as did the head of this firm.

The firm takes the same pride in raising choice vegetables as in developing attractive varities of flowers, and after using their seeds for a number of years we are able to recommend them in the highest terms.

We advise all our readers to send 10 cents for the Guide (which can be deducted from first order); and if there are any of our lady friends who can succeed in growing a natural rose which will compare in beauty with the New Striped Rose shown in the illustration, we should like to receive an invitation to call and see it.

OUR WASHINGTON LETTER.

Notes from the American Capital by Our own Correspondent.

The ingenious scheme to which the Senate may employ its own liberal and stately rules was illustrated in almost the first active business of the session. Senator Stewart, the venerable silver king, arose as the order of business was reached, and presented "a bill to increase salaries of census supervisors." What possible plight of forension could such a bit of party, special legislation admit? It remained for the Senator from Nevada to demonstrate the astonishing maps of the measure, and as he unrolled an hour and a half's manuscript for the purpose there was a thinning of attendance on the floor, and the places in the galleries that know their habitudes knew them no more for the time.

It had been suggested that the census embrace reports upon the national debts of the world, data never before included in the work. Senator Stewart approved the plan, and was constrained to admit that while it widened the sphere of the supervisor's duties it should not neglect a commensurate increase of their reward. What is more impressed upon the debt of a nation—its debt of state and the obligations of its citizens—than its currency? Certainly nothing. And when a few hardy tenants of the Senate seats heard this wise utterance, they knew that Senator Stewart had made easy for a silver speech.

Not once again by the remotest implication, did the speaker advert to the under paid census taker, but for ninety minutes poured forth the ringing gospel of hard money. Immediately upon the close of the effort the pending measure went to vote, and as though swept through by the voice of Mr. Stewart's advocacy, the supervisors of the census were granted more pay.

A gentleman who is a warm personal friend of Samuel J. Randall, and who visits him frequently, says he Pennsylvania statesman keeps as thoroughly posted on the proceedings in and out of Congress as any man in the country. His bed chamber presents about the same appearance as the room of an exchange editor or on one of the Metropolitan daily papers. He takes all the leading papers that reach the Capital on the day of publication, and is not satisfied until he has gone through the whole batch. In addition to this he has the "Congressional Record" sent to him each day, and through this follows all the proceedings in the House and Senate. Those who are admitted to his room are surprised at his ability to discuss the measures pending in Congress, and so accurately state the standing of each one of them on the House or Senate calendar. Mr. Randall's physicians advised against this, but he has been in harness too long to shut himself off from the world, and he is of the opinion that his plan of keeping abreast of the times has done more than anything else to better his condition.

Numerous requests have been received by Superintendent Porter of the census for a special investigation to be made of the exact condition, financial and social, of the colored race in this country. The census act of March 1, 1889, provides for the first time for a subdivision of the colored population into "negroes, mulattoes, quadroons and octoroons." Provision for ascertaining this information will be made in the population schedule. In calling the attention of Secretary Noble to this matter Mr. Porter states that at his request special agents made inquiry as to the cost of such a special investigation, and found that collecting this information on a special schedule and compiling it would require an additional appropriation of $450,000. In addition to the increased cost the superintendent expresses the fear that special enumeration on a separate schedule in the hands of the census enumerator would endanger and possibly delay the completion of the field work beyond the limit of one month prescribed by the law.

"Did you ever see anything finer than these paved streets?" "Never," said the man from Montana, following with his eyes the splendid sweep of avenue pointed out by his Washington host. "The National Capital" continued the Washington man "has the most magnificently paved streets—" "And the most informal sidewalks in creation," bawled the Montana sight seer, who, having been diverted by the beautiful street pavement, had forgotten the gopher holes, buffalo wallows, and other inequalities and man traps of the crumbling brick sidewalks of the National Capital.

Representative Henderson of Iowa describes "a row" to be "when one side of the House is trying to do the best they can and the other side is trying to make a little political capital." If the definition be correct Congress is always in a row. And it is mostly.

JOHN GREEN & SON

HEALTHFUL EXERCISE.

Only a few months ago these romping, rosy-cheeked lassies were puny, delicate, pale, sickly girls. By the aid of Dr. Pierce's world-famed Favorite Prescription, they have blossomed out into beautiful, plump, hale, hearty, strong women.

"Favorite Prescription" is an invigorating, restorative tonic and as a regulator and promoter of functional action at that critical period of change from girlhood to womanhood, it is a perfectly safe remedial agent, and can produce only good results. It is warmly commended, by an experienced and skillful physician, and adapted to woman's delicate organization. It is purely vegetable in its composition and perfectly harmless in any condition of the system. It imparts strength to the whole system. For overworked, "worn-out," "run-down," debilitated teachers, milliners, dressmakers, seamstresses, "shop-girls," housekeepers, nursing mothers, and feeble women generally, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the greatest earthly boon, being unequaled as an invigorating cordial and restorative tonic. It is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. The guarantee has been faithfully observed one for many years.

The Fisheries Question

is an important one, but the question of paramount importance to day, is "What shall we do to catarrh?" Mr. John McSwain, model school teacher, Charlottetown, P. E. I., says:—I enclose you 50 cents for which please send me a package of Nasal Balm. The package I received some time ago has done me a great deal of good, as much so that I think it will cure me.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS are the medicine most in repute for curing the multifarious maladies which beset mankind when dry sultry weather suddenly gives place to chilly, dreadfully damp days. In fact, these Pills offer relief even if they fail of proving an absolute remedy in all the disturbances of digestion, circulation, and nervous tone which manifest themselves as a vast portion of the population. Under the genial, purifying, and strengthening powers exerted by this excellent medicine the lounge becomes vacant, the appetite improves, digestion is restored and assimilation is rendered perfect. These Pills possess the highly valuable property of cleansing the entire mass of blood, which, in its renovated condition, carries purity, strength, and vigor to every tissue of the body.

The Little Seed.

A little seed lay in the carter's path;
A little shoot bowed in the strong wind's wrath,
A little shrub grew, by its roots held fast;
Then a stout tree braved all the winter's blast

A little cough started—'twas only light;
A little chill shivered the hours of night;
A little pain came and began to grow,
Then consumption laid all his brave strength low

But wise in time. Check the little cough, cure the little chill, dispell the little pain, ere the little ailment becomes the strong, unconquerable giant of disease. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, taken in time, is a remedy for these ills.

An old man named Robert L. Smith was fatally trampled by a horse at Moorefield the other day.

"Just Hear That Child Scream!"

said Mrs Smith to her sister, Mrs Davis, as the sound of a child's shrieks came across the garden from a neighbor's house. "What kind of a woman have you for a neighbor? Does she abuse her children?" "No, indeed," replied Mrs Davis. "She is one of the most tender mothers in existence. But you see, she believes in the old-fashioned style of doctoring. When a child needs physic, she fills a spoon with some nauseous dose, lays the little victim flat on her lap, holds his nose till he is forced to open his mouth for breath, when down goes the doseful mess. Then comes the yells. "No wonder," said Mrs Smith. "Why doesn't she use Dr Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets? They are effective without being harsh, and are as easy to take as sugar plums. I always give them to my children." "And so do I," said Mrs Davis.

A Business Report.

MR JAMES MCCARTY, of Roundstone & McCarty's Collecting Bureau, Drumbo, Ont., states:—Have used several bottles of Burdock Blood Bitters for kidney disorder and find it a wonderful remedy. Previously I had been taking Pills, thinking I had liver complaint, but now I am quite well and will always praise B B B.

COLD IN HEAD — CATARRH — THE 4 STAGES. — CONSUMPTION — DEATH.

There is positive danger to health and life in neglecting a case of Cold in the Head or Catarrh and at this season, with its changeable weather, unusual moisture and sudden changes from heat to cold, there is peculiar liability to cold in the head. A neglected case of Cold in the Head rapidly developes into Catarrh, and neglected Catarrh just as certainly developes into Consumption and leads to premature death. Medical testimony proves conclusively that a large percentage of all the deaths occurring from Consumption had their origin in a neglected Cold, which, by a rapid 4 stages, developed into Catarrh, then into Consumption, that dread disease with which medical science is as yet unable to cope successfully. If you are suffering from Cold in the head, or from any of the symptoms of Catarrh, such as bad breath, dull oppressive headaches, droppings from the head into the throat, hawking and spitting, copious discharges from the nostrils, losing sense of smell, or taste becoming dull, hacking cough, or a general feeling of debility, husky voice, wheezing or croaking sound in your chest when breathing, a feeling of dizziness, particularly when stooping, a feeling of tiredness and indisposition to exertion, a feeling of nausea in the morning when attempting to dislode accumulations in the throat. Do not neglect them. These are but a few of the many symptoms of Catarrh, and if you experience any, BE WARNED IN TIME. Do not permit them to run under the mistaken impression that the disease will eventually wear away. It will not, but on the contrary will wear you away as it has thousands before. Procure at once a bottle of NASAL BALM, the only certain and speedy cure ever offered to the public for Cold in the Head and Catarrh. This is no idle assertion, but an unquestionable fact, which is verified by thousands of testimonials in our possession telling of marvellous cures—These testimonials we have received from all parts of the Dominion, and we append a few, selected at random, as a fair sample of the whole:—

Mr. Alex Burns, of Sydenham, Ont., says:—Gents, I may state that I have been affected with Catarrh for seven or eight years, and it was attended with consequent symptoms such as foul breath, constant dropping into the throat, hawking and spitting, partial deafness, ringing in the ears, and sickening pain in the head directly over either eye. I have used powders and douches, but all to no effect, the only result arising from the use of such was temporary relief, followed by the usual symptoms in a more aggravated form. The results arising from the use of Nasal Balm are sweet breath, stoppage of the droppings into the throat (consequently less hawking and spitting), clearness of hearing, and not once since I began its use have I had pain in the head. In fact it is my opinion that a careful and persistent use of the "Balm" will effect a cure in the worst case of catarrh.

James H. McLeod, Mink River Road, N. B., says:—I have tried other remedies for Catarrh, but received little or no good from them. Your NASAL BALM is certainly the BEST REMEDY I have tried, and all you claim for it. The fact that it is pleasant and convenient to use adds greatly to its value, but its chief worth lies in being a CERTAIN CURE for that unpleasant disease—Catarrh.

Wm. Chas Hanley, postmaster, Spry Bay, N S., says:—I submit the following to the public that any who may be affected may be benefited by the same remedy. Two bottles of your NASAL BALM has RESTORED to PERFECT HEALTH a four year old child of ours, suffering from Catarrh.

Henrietta Blackwell Parker, Ont., says:—Your NASAL BALM is the BEST REMEDY I have yet used for Catarrah. I can breathe more freely than before and my breath has regained its sweetness. I consider NASAL BALM a boon to the suffering.

A CAUTION.—Beware of imitations. If your dealer has not got NASAL BALM in stock do not let him persuade you to take any other remedy which he may say is just as good, but send direct to the undersigned and it will be sent you on receipt of price—50 cents and $1.00 per bottle.

THE SUN

FOR

1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN's opinions about men and things, and some people don't; everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose, it is not THE SUN's fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is a duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out with THE SUN.

Poetry.

ROMANCE OF A BUTTON.

He was asked to sew a button
Was this thing of some word to utter
Where from his overcoat there flew
A button, with a dismal clatter.

He blushed, but she, with woman's tact,
And if she saw a good joke in it,
Cried, laughingly, "There now, I'll act
Your tailor's part for just a minute."

He doffed the coat, and watched her thread
The needle, with her head low bending.
Now, do you know, he softly said,
I have an awful lot of mending.

A bachelor, you'll say, like me,
Is at the mercy of his tailor
And then, there's something else, you—
(At this he turned a trifle paler.)

My heart needs mending much, I fear,
Do you suppose that you could do it?
Well, I don't know, she mused, but dear,
I'll give my whole attention to it.

THE SNOW.

All around, through the forest
As I go,
Shining white in glittering radiance
Lies the snow;
Through the silent, moveless air,
Near and distant—everywhere—
Soft and silent, pure and fair—
Falls the snow.

All the summer bright lies buried
'Neath the snow;
Ripling brooklets cease their murmuring—
Silent flow,
Bound in winter's icy chains,
While King Frost triumphant reigns;
Silenced, too, the snow-birds' strains,
By the snow.

Tiny snowdrops peep already
Through the snow;
Flow'rets blanched with timid terror
Of the snow.

COURTSHIP AND MATRIMONY

To day I wander through the grove,
I stroll across the lea,
The music of the feathered choir,
Brings memories sweet to me.
'Twas here we wandered hand in hand
Among the sprinkling flowers;
Ah! love, I never can forget
Those bright, those golden hours.

The scene appears the same to-day,
Here was our trysting place,
But now it lacks one feature bright,
Your sweet and smiling face.
I miss the music of your voice,
So sweet, so soft, so low,
The eyes that fondly met my own
One little year ago

I sigh to have you by my side;
But, ah! it cannot be;
You cannot come to me to-day,
Beside the trysting tree.
A change has come into our lives—
Our courting days have flown;
You've got to mind the twins, and I
Must take my walks alone.

SUNBEAMS.

A man who has had the influenza says the best prescription for it is a barrel of brandy and a street car ticket to ie.

Unsightly pimples, blotches, tans and all itching humors of the skin are removed by using Dr. Low's Sulphur Soap.

Mrs. Winks—"So you have taken another companion 'for better or for worse,' en?" Mrs. Secondtrip—"Only for better, my dear. He can't possibly be worse than the other one was."

Mrs. Smitem—"Bobby, you bad boy, have you been fighting with Tommy Slimson again? Dear, dear! I shall have to get you a new suit. Bobby—"That's nothing, ma. His ma may have to get her a new boy."

Men like to be looked up at, depended on, quoted and referred to. An ugly temper is a trial that few women are able to endure. The only cure is silence. You can't kiss a furious man; it only makes him worse. The thing to do is to keep still, let him cool, and let the matter drop. He will respect your sense and come to terms of his own accord.

Men must be taken as they are, not as they should be; they improve under the refining influence of mutual love, and he is a wretched specimen of humanity who cannot be counted on to shield his wife from the buffets of the world and be an anchor when youth and beauty have proved unfaithful.

An old Scotch divine, a bachelor, who did not possess a mense, was one day asked by a hearer of his why he did not get a wife. "When I get a drinkin," he replied, "I'll leave a doe." A boy holding a candle to a tradesman allowed something to attract his attention from the job, so the candle came in contact with the man's head and ignited his hair. After scolding the boy he made the remark that if the master was to come in, judging by the smell, he would think they had been singing a sheep's head. "Weel," replied the boy, "he maybe wadna be far wrang."

Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charms. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess this: a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—E. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Bebington, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

Blood Diseases are cured by the persevering use of Ayer's Sarsaparilla.

This medicine is an Alterative, and causes a radical change in the system. The process, in some cases, may not be quite so rapid as in others; but, with persistence, the result is certain. Read these testimonials:—

"For two years I suffered from a severe pain in my right side, and had other troubles caused by a torpid liver and dyspepsia. After giving several medicines a fair trial without a cure, I began to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla. I was greatly benefited by the first bottle, and after taking five bottles I was completely cured."—John W. Benson, 19 Lawrence st., Lowell, Mass.

Last May a large carbuncle broke out on my arm. The usual remedies had no effect and I was confined to my bed for eight weeks. A friend induced me to try Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Less than three bottles healed the sore. In all my experience with medicine, I never saw more

Wonderful Results.

Another marked effect of the use of this medicine was the strengthening of my sight."—Mrs. Carrie Adams, Holly Springs, Texas.

"I had a dry scaly humor for years, and suffered terribly; and, as my brother and sister were similarly afflicted, I presume the malady is hereditary. Last winter, Dr. Tyron, (of Fernandina, Fla.,) recommended me to take Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and continue it for a year. For five months I took it daily. I have not had a blemish upon my body for the last three months."—T. E. Wiley, 146 Chambers st., New York City.

"Last fall and winter I was troubled with a dull, heavy pain in my side. I did not notice it much at first, but it gradually grew worse until it became almost unbearable. During the latter part of this time, disorders of the stomach and liver increased my troubles. I began taking Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and, after faithfully continuing the use of this medicine for some months, the pain disappeared and I was completely cured."—Mrs. Augusta A. ### BLESSINGS IN DISGUISE.

Midas sits musing in the porch,
The bright blue sky above him,
But cannot see the light of Heaven,
Or smiles of those who love him;
But though the utter darkness hides
The earthly from his vision,
He sees the bowers of Paradise,
And splendors of the Elysian;
His learns from angels at his side
Creation's awful story,
And looks upon them face to face,
Undismayed by their glory!

Beethoven's music, great high priest,
Whose heaven-born fancies capture
The tangled skeins of harmony
And weave them into rapture,
Hears not the voice of human kind
Nor sound of life and motion;
Nor tempests on the echoing hills
Nor moan of restless ocean—
And yet in silence of his mind
Can hear the throb and thunder
Of jubilant hymns and solemn chants,
And lays of Love and Wonder!

Thus, though relentless Fate may close
The gateways of our senses,
Immortal Spirit overleaps
Their barriers and defences,
And with celestial recompense
For harm and loss diurnal,
Yields greater joys than flesh affords,
In foretastes of the eternal!

To blind old Milton's rayless orbs
A light divine is given,
And deaf Beethoven hears the hymns
And harmonies of Heaven!

CHAPTER XVI.

THE GREEN ENVELOPE.

Sir, you shall understand what hath befall'n,
Which, as I think, you know not. Here is a letter.

—OTHELLO.

HER departure was a relief to me. First, because I had heard so much, I wanted an opportunity of digesting it; and, secondly, because of my interest in the engraving she had shown me, and the impatience I felt to study it more closely. I took it up the moment she closed the door.

It was a picture of a martyr, and had evidently been cut from some godo sized book. It represented a man clothed in a long white garment, standing with his back to the stake, and his hand held out to the flames, which were slowly consuming it. As a work of art it was ordinary; as the illustration of some mighty fact, it was full of suggestion. I gazed at it for a long time, and then turned to the bookcase. Was the book from which it had been taken there? I eagerly hoped so. For, ignorant as I may seem to you, I did not know the picture or the incident it represented; and I was anxious to know both. For Mr. Barrows not the man to disfigure a work of art by covering it with a coarse print like this unless he had a motive; and how could even a suspicion of that motive be mine, without a full knowledge of just what this picture implied?

But though I looked from end to end of the various shelves before me, I did not succeed in finding the volume from which this engraving had been taken. Large books were there in plenty, but none of the exact size of the print I held in my hand. I own I was disappointed and turned away from the bookcase at last with a feeling of having been baffled on the verge of some very interesting discovery.

The theory advanced with so much assurance by Mrs. Simpson had not met with much credence on my part. I believed her facts, but not the conclusions she drew from them. Nothing she had related to me convinced me that Mr. Barrows was in any way insane; nor could I be so without the knowledge of Ada, if not of his associates and friends.

At the same time I was becoming more and more assured in my own mind that his death was the result of his own act, and, had it not been for the difficulty of imagining a reason for it, could have retired to rest that night with a feeling of real security in the justness of a conclusion that so exonerated the man I loved. As it was, that secret doubt still remained like a cloud over my mind, a doubt which I had promised myself should be entirely removed before I allowed my partiality for Mr. Pollard to take upon itself the character of partisanship. I therefore continued my explorations through the room.

Mr. Barrows' desk presented to me the greatest attraction of anything there; one that was entirely of the imagination of course, since nothing could have induced me to open it, notwithstanding that every key stood in its lock, and one of the drawers was pulled a little way out. Only the law had a right to violate his papers; and hard as it was to deny myself a search into what was possibly the truest exponent of his character, I resolutely did so, consoling myself with the thought that if any open explanation of his secret had been in these drawers I would have been produced at the inquest.

As for his books I felt no such scruples. But then, what could his books tell me? Nothing save that he was a wide student and loved the delicate and imaginative in literature. Besides, I had glanced at many of the volumes, in my search after the one which had held the engraving. Lest I did pass a minute, and run my eye along the shelves, vigorously searching perhaps, that often in the most out of the way corners lurks the secret object for which we are so carefully seeking. But I saw nothing, to detain me, and after one brief glance at a strong and spirited statuette that adorned the top shelf, I hurried on to a small table upon which I thought I saw a photographic album.

I was not mistaken; and it was with considerable interest I took it up and began to run over its pages in search for that picture of Ada which I felt ought to be there. And which was there; but which I scarcely looked at twice, so much was my attention attracted by an envelope that fell out from between the leaves as I eagerly turned them over. That envelope with its simple direction, "Miss Ada Reynolds, Mosaic Street, S——," made an era in my history. For I no sooner perceived it than I felt confident of having seen it or its like before; and presently, with almost the force of an electric shock, I recollected the letter which I had brought Ada the afternoon of the day she died, and which as my startled conscience now told me, had not only never been given her, but had not been so much as seen by me since, though all her belongings had passed into my hands, and the table where I had flung it had been emptied of its contents more than once. That letter and this empty envelope were, in style, hand-writing, and direction, fac similes. It had, therefore, come from Mr. Barrows; a most significant fact, and one which I had no sooner realized than I was seized by the most intense excitement, and might have done some wild and foolish thing, had not the lateness of the hour restrained me, and kept my passionate hopes and fears within their proper bounds. As it was, I found myself obliged to take several turns up and down the room, and even to open the window for a breath of fresh air, before I could face the subject with any calmness, or ask myself what had become of this letter, with any hope of receiving a rational reply:

That in the startling and tragic events of that day it had been overlooked and forgotten, I did not wonder. But that it should have escaped my notice afterwards, or if mine, that of the landlady who took charge of the room in my absence, was what I could not understand. As far as I could remember, I left the letter lying in plain view on the table! Why, then, had not some one seen and produced it? Could it be that some one more interested than I knew had stolen it? Or was the landlady of my former home alone to blame for its being lost or mislaid?

Had it been daylight I should have at once gone down to my former boarding-place to inquire; but as it was ten o'clock at night, I could only satisfy my impatience by going carefully over the incidents of that memorable day, in the hope of rousing some memory which would lead to an elucidation of this new mystery.

First, then, I distinctly recollected receiving the letter from the postman. I had met him at the foot of the front steps as I came home from my unsuccessful search for employment, and he had handed me the letter, simply saying: "For Miss Reynolds." I scarcely looked at it, certainly gave it no thought for we had been together but a week, and I had as yet taken no interest in her concerns. So mechanical, indeed, had been my whole action in the matter, that I doubt if the sight of Mr. Barrows' writing alone, even though it had been used in transcribing her name, would have served to recall the incident to my mind. But the shade of the envelope—it was of a peculiar greenish tint—gave that unconscious spur to the memory which was needed to bring back the very look of the writing which had been on the letter I had so carelessly handled; and I found, as others have found before me, that there is no real forgetfulness in this world; that the most superficial glance may serve to imprint images upon the mind, which only await time and occasion to reappear before us with startling distinctness.

My entrance into my own room, my finding it empty, and the consequent flinging of the letter down on the table, all came back to me with the utmost clearness; even the fact that the letter fell face downwards and that I did not stop to turn it over. But beyond that all was blank to me up to the moment when I found myself confronting Ada standing with her hand on her heart in that sudden spasm of pain which had been the too sure precursor of her rapidly approaching doom.

But wait! Where was I standing when I first became conscious of her presence in the room? Why, in the window, of course. I remembered now just how hot the afternoon sun looked to me as I stared at the white walls of the cottages over the way. And she—where was she?—between me and the table? Yes! She had, therefore, passed by the letter, and might have picked it up, might even have opened it, and read it before the spell of my revery was broken, and I turned to find her standing there before my eyes. Her pallor, the evident distress under which she was labouring, even the sudden pain which had attacked her heart, might thus be accounted for, and what I had always supposed to be a purely physical attack proved to be the result of a mental and moral shock. But no. Had she opened and read the letter it would have been found there; or if not there, at least upon her person after death. Besides, her whole conduct between the moment I faced her and that of the alarm in the street below precluded the idea that anything of importance to her and her love had occurred to break her faith in the future and the man to whom care she was pledged. Could I not remember the happy smile which accompanied her offer of assistance and home to me? And was there anything but hope and trust in the tone with which she had designated her lover as being the best and noblest man in town? No; if she had read his communication and afterwards disposed of it in some way I did not observe, then it was not of the nature I suspected; but an ordinary letter, similar in character to others she had received, foretelling nothing, and only valuable in the elucidation of the mystery before me from the fact of its offering proof presumptive that he did not anticipate death, or at all events did not meditate it.

An important enough fact to establish certainly; but it was not the fact in which I had come to believe, and so I found it difficult to give it a place in my mind, or even to entertain the possibility of Ada's having seen the letter at all. I preferred rather to indulge in all sorts of wild conjectures, having the landlady, the servant, even Dr. Farnham, at their base; and it was not till I was visited by some mad thought of Rhoda Colwell's possible connivance in the disappearance of this important bit of evidence, that I realized the enormity of my selfish folly and endeavored to put an end to its further indulgence by preparing stoically for bed.

But sleep, which would have been so welcome, did not come; and after a long and weary night, I arose in anything but a refreshed state, to meet the exigencies of what might possibly prove to be a most important day.

The first thing to be done was undoubtedly to visit my old home and interview its landlady. If nothing came of that, to hunt up the nurse, Mrs. Gannon, whom, as you will remember, I had left in charge of my poor Ada's remains when sudden duty in the shape of Dr. Farnham carried me away to the bedside of Mrs. Pollard; and if this also came to naught, to burst the bonds of secrecy which I had maintained, and by taking this same Dr. Farnham into my confidence obtain at least an adviser who would relieve me, if only partially, from the weight of responsibility, which I now felt to be pressing rather too heavily upon my strength.

But though I carried out this programme as far as seeking for and procuring an interview with Mrs. Gannon at her place of nursing, I did not succeed in obtaining the least clew to the fate of this mysteriously lost letter. Neither of the women mentioned had seen it, nor was it really believed by them to have been on the table when they arranged the room after my Ada's peaceful death. Yet even to this they could not swear, nor would the landlady admit but that it might still have been lying there when they came to carry Ada away though she would say that it could not have been anywhere in view the next day, for she had thoroughly cleaned and tidied up the room herself; and as in doing this she had been obliged to shift every article off the table on to the bed and back again, she must not only have seen, but handled the letter twice; and this she was morally certain she did not do.

I was therefore in as great perplexity as ever, and was seriously meditating a visit to Dr. Farnham, when I bethought me of making one final experiment before resorting to this last and not altogether welcome alternative.

This was to examine every thing which had been on the table, in the hope of discovering in some out of the way receptacle the missing letter for which I had such need. To be sure it was an effort that promised little, there having been but few articles on the table capable of concealing even such a small object as this I was in search of; but when one is at their wit's ends, they do not stop to discuss probabilities, or even to weigh in too nice a scale the prospect of success.

Recalling, therefore, just what had been on the table, I went to the trunk in which these articles were packed, and laid them out one by one on the floor. They were as follows:—A work basket of Ada's; a box of writing-paper; a copy of Harper's Magazine, an atlas; and two volumes of poetry, the property belonging to Ada and one to me.

A single glance in the work basket was sufficient, also into the box of stationery. But the atlas was well shaken and the magazine carefully looked through, before I decided it was not in them. As for the two books of poetry I dissolved them so completely, I was about to toss them back unopened, when there came upon me a disposition to be to be thorough, and I looked at them both, only to find snugly ensconced in my own little copy of Mrs. Browning the long sought, and despaired of letter, with its tell tale green envelope unbroken, and its contents, in so far as I could see, unviolated and undisturbed.

CHAPTER XVII.

DAVID BARROWS.

"I have lived long enough."—MACBETH.

Before I proceeded to open this letter I reasoned with myself. The will by which I had come into possession of Ada's effects was, as I knew, informal and possibly illegal. But it was the expression of her wishes, and there had been no one to dispute them or question my right to the inheritance she had so benevolently bequeathed me. At the same time I felt a hesitation about opening this letter, as I had about using her money; and it was not till I remembered the trust she had reposed in me, and the promise I had given her to support Mr. Barrows' good name before the world, that I summed up sufficient determination to break its seal. My duty once clear to me, however, I no longer hesitated. This is the result:

September 23rd.—Evening.

MY BELOVED ADA:—Could I by any means mitigate the blow which I am forced to deal you, believe me it should be done. But no words can prepare you for the terrible fact I am about to reveal, and I think from what I know of you, and of your delicate but strong soul, that in a matter of life and death like this the most direct language is what you would choose me to employ.

Know then, dearest of all women, that a duty I dare not fly from condemns me to death; that the love we have cherished, the hopes in which we have indulged can have no fulfilment in this world, but must be yielded as a sacrifice to the inexorable claim of conscience and that ideal of right which has been mine since I took upon myself the lofty vocation of a Christian minister.

You, my people, my own self even, have thought me an honest man. God knows I meant to be, even to the point of requiring nothing from others I was not willing to give myself. But our best friends do not know us; we do not know ourselves. When the hour of trial came, and a sudden call was made upon my faith and honor, I failed to sustain myself, failed ignominiously, showing myself to be no stronger than the weakest of my flock—ay, than the child that flies before a shadow because it is black, and he does not or will not see that it is his father's form that casts it.

Such lapses on the part of men professing to lead others demand heavy penalties. I feared to lose my life, therefore my life must go. Nothing short of this would reinstate me in my own eyes, or give to my repentance that stern and absolute quality which the nature of my sin imperatively demands.

That I must involve you in my sorrow and destruction is the bitterest drop in my cup. But dainty and flower like as you are, you have a great nature, and would not hold me back from an act necessary to the welfare and honor of my eternal soul. I see you rather urging me on, giving me your last kiss, and smiling upon me with your own inspiring smile. So sure am I of this, that I can bear not to see you again; bear to walk for the last time by your house, leaving only my blessing in the air. For it is a part of my doom that I may not see you; since, were I to find myself in your presence, I could scarcely forbear telling you whither I was going, and that no man must know till all has been accomplished.

I go, then, without other farewells than these poor words can give you. Be strong and bear my loss, as many a noble woman before you has borne the wreck of all her hopes. When I am found—as some day I shall be—tell my people I died in Christian faith, and for the simple reason that my honor, as a man and minister, demanded it. If they love me they will take my word for it; but if questions should arise, and a fuller knowledge of my fate and the reasons which led me to such an act should in your judgment seem to be required, then go to my desk, and, in a secret drawer let into the back, you will find a detailed confession which will answer every inquiry and set straight any false or unworthy suspicions that may arise.

But heed these words and mark them well: Till such a need should arise, the manuscript is to be kept inviolate even from you; and no matter what the seeming need, or by what love or anxiety you may be driven, touch not that desk nor drawer till ten days have elapsed, or I shall think you love my body more than me, and the enjoyment of temporal comfort to the eternal weight of glory which is laid up for those who hold out steadfast to the end.

And now, my dear, my dear, with all the affection of my poor, weak, erring heart, I hold out arms of love towards you. Farewell for a short space. When we meet again may it be on equal terms once more, the heavy sin blotted out, the grievous wrong expiated.

Till then, God bless you.

—DAVID.

Do not wonder at my revealing nothing of this in our late interviews. You were so happy, I dared not drop a shadow one day sooner than was necessary into your young life. Besides, my struggle was dark and secret, and could brook no eye upon it save that of the eternal God.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A LAST REQUEST.

'Tis she
That tempers him to this extremity.

—Richard III.

The night had fallen. I was in a strange and awe struck mood. The manuscript, which after some difficulty I had succeeded in finding, lay before me unopened. A feeling as of an invisible presence was in the air. I hesitated to turn the page, written, as I already felt, with the life-blood of the man in whose mysterious doom the happiness of my own life had become entangled.

Waiting for courage, I glanced mechanically about the room. How strangely I had been led in this affair! How from the first I seemed to have been picked out and appointed for the solving of this mystery, till now I sat in the very room, at the very desk, in front of the very words, of its victim. I thought of Dwight Pollard struggling with his fate, and unconscious that in a few minutes the secret of Mr. Barrows' death would be known; of Rhoda Colwell, confident of her revenge and blind to the fact that I held in my hand what might possibly blast her sharpest weapon, and make her most vindictive efforts useless. Then each and every consideration of a purely personal nature vanished, and I thought only of the dread and tortured soul of him upon whose solemn and awesome history I was about to enter. Was it, as his letter seemed to imply, a martyr's story? I looked at the engraving of Cranmer, which had been a puzzle to me a few days before, and understanding it now, gathered fortitude by what it seemed to suggest, and hastily unrolled the manuscript.

This is what I read:

"He that would save his life shall lose it."

In order that the following tale of sin and its expiation may be understood, I must give a few words to the motives and hopes under which I entered the ministry.

I am a believer in the sacred character of my profession, and the absolute and unqualified devotion of those embracing it to the aims and purposes of the Christian religion. Though converted, as it is called, in my sixteenth year, I cannot remember the time my pulse did not beat with appreciation of those noble souls who had sacrificed every joy and comfort of this temporal life for the sake of their faith and the glory of God. I delighted in Fox's "Book of Martyrs," and while I shuddered over its pages in a horror I did not wholly understand, I read them again and again, till there was not a saint whose life I did not know by heart with just the death he died and the pangs he experienced. Such a mania did this become with me at one time that I grew visibly ill and had to have the book taken away from me and more cheerful reading substituted in its stead.

Feeling thus strongly in childhood, when half, if not all, my interest sprang from the fascination which horrors have upon the impressible mind, what were my emotions and longings when the real morning of the Christian life was revealed to me, and I saw in this steadfastness of spirit unto death the triumph of the immortal soul over the weakness of the flesh and the terrors of a purely transitory suffering!

That the days for such display of firmness in the fiery furnace were over was almost a matter of regret to me in the first flush of my enthusiasm for the cause I had espoused. I wished so profoundly to show my love, and found all modern ways so tame in comparison to those which demanded the yielding up of one's very blood and life. Poor fool! did I never think that those who are the bravest in imagination fail often the most ignominiously when brought face to face with the doom they have invoked.

I have never been a robust man, and consequently have never entered much into those sports and exercises incident to youth and early manhood that show a man of what stuff he is made. I have lived in my books till I came to S——, since which I have tried to live in the joys and sorrows of my fellow beings.

The great rule of Christian living has seemed to me imperative. Love your neighbour as yourself, or, as I have always interpreted it, more than yourself. For a man, then, to sacrifice that neighbour to save himself from physical or mental distress, has always seemed to me not only the height of cowardice, but a direct denial of those truths upon which are founded the Christian's ultimate hope. As a man myself, I despise with my whole heart such weaklings; as a Christian minister I denounce them. Nothing can excuse a soul for wavering in its duty because that duty is hard. It is the hard things we should take delight in facing; otherwise we are babes and not men, and our faith a matter of expediency, and not that stern and immovable belief in God and His purposes which can alone please Deity and bring us into that immediate communion with His spirit which it should be the end and aim of every human soul to enjoy.

Such are my principles. Let us see how I have illustrated them in the events of the last six weeks.

On the sixteenth of August, five weeks ago today, I was called to the bedside of Samuel Pollard. He had been long sinking with an incurable disease, and now the end was at hand and my Christian offices required. I was in the full tide of sermon-writing when the summons came, and I hesitated at first whether to follow the messenger at once or wait till the daylight had quite disappeared, and with it my desire to place on paper the thoughts that were inspiring me with more than ordinary fervor.

But a question to my own heart decided me. Not my sermon, but the secret disinclination I always felt to enter this special family, was what in reality held me back; and this was a reason which, as you will have seen from the words I have already written, I could not countenance. I accordingly signified to the messenger that I would be with Mr. Pollard in a few moments, and putting away my papers, prepared to leave the room.

There is a saying in the Bible to the effect that no man liveth to himself, nor dieth to himself. If in the course of this narrative I seem to show little consideration for the secrets of others, let this be at once my explation and excuse. That only in the cause of truth do I speak at all; and that in holding up before you the follies and wrong doings of persons you know, I subject them to no heavier penalty than that which I have incurred through my own sin. I shall therefore neither gloss over nor suppress any fact bearing upon a full explanation of my fate; and when I say I hesitated to go to Mr. Pollard because of my inherent dislike to enter his house, I will proceed to give as my reason for this dislike, my unconquerable distrust of his wife, who, if a fine looking and capable woman, is certainly one to be feared by every candid and truth-loving nature.

But, as I said before, I did not yield to the impulse I had within me to stay; and merely stopping to exact a parting glance about my room—why, I do not know, for I could have had no premonition of the fact that I was bidding good-by to the old life of hope and peace forever—I hastened after the messenger whom I had sent on before me to Mr. Pollard's house.

Small occurrences sometimes make great impressions on the mind. As I was turning the corner at Halsey-street, the idiot boy Colwell came rushing by, and almost fell into my arms. I started back, shuddering, as if some calamity had befallen me. An invincible repugnance to anything deformed or half-witted has always been one of my weaknesses, and for him to have touched me—— I hate myself as I write it, but I cannot think of it now without a chill in my veins and an almost unbearable feeling of physical contamination. Yet as I would be as just to myself as I hope to be to others, I did not let this incident pass, without a struggle to conquer my lower nature. Standing still, I called the boy back, and deliberately, and with a reverential thought of the Christ, I laid my hand on his arm,

"THE MAIL" IN A FIX.

Since the last issue of THE SUN, the Toronto Empire has made some startling discovery, which we have rarely seen its contemporary, the Mail, feel the concern due to Uncle Sam's domicile. The Empire sent a special representative to Washington to find out what Editor Edward Farrer, of the Mail, had been telling the U. S. Canadian committee. And what a stock of information the delegate brought back! It clearly showed that the editor of the old Conservative journal is a pronounced annexationist, and that he, on behalf of the Mail, advised the committee to report adverse to adopting Ben. Butler's reciprocity bill, and that Canada would be forced to join the Union. In the face of such strong accusations, the Mail set up a flimsy defence, and C. W. Bunting, the managing-director, and Editor Farrer entered suits against Mr. David Creighton, the manager of the Empire, and Editor Louis P. Krebs, charging them with criminal libel. The cases have been in the police-court for the past few days. Mr. Creighton took all the responsibility and was committed for trial, and Mr Krebs was discharged.

Is there any Canadian law that provides for the punishing of loyal citizens, who expose the underhand work of traitors? We don't think so.

CURRENCY AND ITS SECURITY.

(London Free Press.)

It is singular that some people in financial circles profess to be afraid of a national currency, when at the present time, and for years past, the very large proportion of it is of that character. As we all know, the "ones," the "twos," and the "fours," are issued by the Government, and form the bulk of the money that is in the hands of the people. And no harm has come of it. The predictions that a "stringency" would arise have not been fulfilled. Transactions go on from time to time as before, and the banks have been able to accomodate themselves to the change as they would be able to do if the entire circulation were of the same kind. But the currency that prevails with us is of the hermaphrodite complexion. It is part guaranteed by the Government and part by private banking institutions. Now, if we are not very much mistaken, the public would prefer that all the money that passes current from day to day should be of the national sort. It should be of a kind to which no exception could be taken at home or abroad, which would pass at par all over. Some ingenious contrivances are afoot to endeavor to secure the validity of the currency by a mutual bank guarantee, by means of which all the banks would be liable for the validity, the solvency of the notes issued by any other bank. This might work very well, perhaps, so far as the banks are concerned, but it would fall short of public expectation which is, that the currency of the country should be guaranteed by the country. In such a case the occurrence of financial failures would not be the cause of such alarm as they are at present. It is true that when a "run" takes place on any of the banks in good standing the other banks come to its aid, and gold pours in till the alarmed ones are satisfied, and are willing to accept notes as solvent in the evening which in the morning were regarded as very indifferent security. But if the money that is of necessity in the hands of the people, and by means of which they are able to carry on the daily transactions in the market and the store were to be of a "national" character no such difficulties would ever arise—so long as the country remained solvent. There would be no questionings as to the security that a bank note affords, for the reason that, bearing the imprimatur of the government, it would be unhesitingly accepted everywhere and at all times. It would be known that at the back of each note, no matter what its denomination, stood the entire taxation of the country—the entire wealth, realized and latent of the country. And that monetary status would be so absolute as to remove from the minds of all any apprehension as to the ultimate fate of the money that is given out to them, and passes from hand to hand. The banking interest is fighting certainly in its possession the moiety of the circulation that still remains to it. It made its powerful deputation to Ottawa to influence the Government with respect to its coming legislation. And it argues that if the currency becomes "nationalized" many evils will result. Some may be said that the Administration of the day stands, as between two opposing interests, the people on the one side and the banks on the other. It is not at all necessary to point out in what direction duty lies if it should be the opinion of the Government that the wish of the general public is in favor of a currency national and therefore indisputable in its character. The idea that is uppermost in the minds of the people is in relation to the security of the currency, and not as to how that condition may affect any of the bank institutions. They look to the Government to remove once for all the uncertainty that crops up from time to time as to the validity and absolute solvency, of the currency, and we are of the opinion that considerable disappointment will be felt if in order to satisfy the demands of the managers of the banks—to some of them—the currency of the country should be kept in its present unsatisfactory condition. The people in general should be proud of a kind of money, that was national in its character and undeniable in the security that it affords.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Thirteen counties in Ireland have been relieved of the operation of the Coercion act.

THE Supreme court has confirmed the judgment of Justice Falconbridge unseating Mr. Colter, the Grit M.P. for Haldimand for bribery by agents.

Andrew Draper, a leading dry goods merchant, absconded from Winnipeg the other day, leaving creditors for large amounts. He sold his stock and took the proceeds with him. His liabilities will run up into the thousand.

THE Post Office Department of Canada last year carried 92,668,000 letters, 19,355,000 post cards, 3,649,000 registered letters and 3,872,000 free letters, or nearly 108 millions in all—besides newspapers, circulars, etc.

MUST GO TO JAIL.—The Supreme Court has affirmed the conviction of Johon Most and his sentence to one year's imprisonment in the penitentiary. Most was convicted of using language intending to incite riot during a speech at an Anarchist meeting held in New York in 1887, to express indignation at the hanging of the Chicago brethern.

FOR AN HONEST BALLOT.—Governor Beaver, of New Jersey, in his message to the Legislature, last week, says: —The best sentiment of the country in all the states demand ballot reform and honest election. He says the highest aim of all parties is good government, and this cannot be secured without elections. The safety of the state, pure government, the perpetuity of free institutions all rest upon the purity of the ballot.

THE Canadian Pacific Railway enjoys one advantage over the the American Pacific lines that Congress cannot legislate away from it, and that is freedom from snow blockades. Winter after winter tells the same story: while the traffic on the American lines is paralyzed for long periods by the snow, the Canadian trains are running on time.—Ingersoll Chronicle.

STRIKING OUT.—From late reports from Winnipeg say it is the intention of the Northern Pacific & Manitoba company to strike out boldly for Fort McLeod and Crow's Nest Pass. The proposed branch to the Souris coal fields was originally located from Souris City on the Morris-Brandon branch in a northwesterly direction to the coal fields, but that location has been abandoned and a line has now been surveyed from Belmont, and from that line a branch has been located southward to the coal fields, the main line being continued on westward, and what is now known as the Morris Brandon section has hitherto been as the main line but it seems that the main line is so be built almost west from Morris, and all lines deflecting therefrom will merely be feeders. The main line above referred to as now projected will tap all the settlements along the southwestern portion of Manitoba, Assiniboia and Alberta, as well as the coal fields and cattle districts of the two Northwest provinces.

But President McDonagh objects to the removal of Mr. Langford from London Conference, and doesn't purpose allowing him to go to Brampton, if he can help it, and this is how the scheme is to be worked:—Mr. McIntyre is to be notified that he cannot come to London South, and Rev. Mr Scott, of Queen's avenue, and Mr. Langford are to exchange charges. There is going to be a lively time in the London South board if the president persists in his present idea"—London Free Press.

A PICKPOCKET NABBED.—Wm. Watson, an East Garafraxa farm laborer, came to town with $10 a short time ago, and overloaded himself with bad whiskey. During his rambles he became acquainted with George Crawley, the man who was whitecapped some time ago, and the twain painted the town a brilliant crimson. After drinking $5 of the visitor's money, Crawley undertook to take care of his friend, and escorted him to the engine house of the stone gristmill on Mill street. Chief Shields saw the pair and his suspicions were aroused. He followed suit and arrived in time to hear Crawley say to his friend: "If you don't keep quiet, I'll roast you in the furnace." The members of the council this year are:

W. L. Walsh, mayor.

J Lindsay, reeve.

H Endecott, deputy reeve.

COUNCILLORS.—North Ward—J. S. Yeoman, Jesse Ketchum; South Ward—W P King, Jas. Pinkney; East Ward—W. T. Bailey, Geo Cobean; West Ward—Marshall Green, H. Gillespie.

BRILLIANT ADDRESS.

The Municipal Act imposes upon the head of every municipality the duty of recommending to his council such measures within its powers as may tend to the improvement of the finances, health, security, cleanliness, comfort and ornament of the municipality. In fulfilment of this statutory obligation I desire to place before you my views upon some matters which, in the best interests of the town, should, I think, receive your immediate attention.

The present system of executing repairs and carrying out improvements on the streets is, to my mind, entirely wrong. There are many objections to it, the principal one being that under it the responsibility of supervising the work rests almost entirely upon the chairman of the committee on roads and bridges, who, in order to efficiently discharge his duty, must devote more time to it than should be demanded from one who receives no remuneration for his services, and who, being forced to elect between neglecting his own business and slightingthe work upon the streets, naturally chooses the latter. Then the committee is too large, being within one of a majority of the entire council, and thus being able, with one additional vote, to control the council upon all questions relating to matters within the jurisdiction of the committee, leads to "ward grab ism" and all the evils that grow from that pernicious system. The money spent upon the streets forms the largest item in the controllable expenditure of the town, and I would very much like to see a change made in the manner of laying it out. I think that the committee should consist of three members, of whom the reeve or deputy reeve should be one, and that an overseer of highways should be appointed whose duties should be to keep the streets in proper repair, to report to the committee from time to time as to the necessity for making improvements, to superintend the work of the laborers and keep their time, and to exercise a general supervision over the streets. His appointment need be for but a limited space of time, say three months, during which time all the expenditure should be made, and no money should be spent except upon his recommendation. I need not enter into a discussion of the matter more fully at present, as my wish is to give form to my general ideas on the subject rather than to work them out in detail. I would be glad to have appoint a committee to formulate a scheme by which this matter will be placed upon a more satisfactory basis than the present one.

It is of the utmost importance that the work of assessing the town should be efficiently and honestly performed. The work of the assessor, as varied on appeal, forms a basis upon which the amount of the liability of each ratepayer for taxes is established, and an inefficient and dishonest assessment is sure to result in trouble and dissatisfaction. A great deal of the responsibility of the assessment rests upon the council, as it is made by an appointee of the council, the members of which are alone to blame if an improper appointment is made. In my opinion the appointment of an assessor is the most important one that the council has to make. The duties on all the other officials while requiring care and attention and intelligence of a high order, are principally of a routine character. The assessor possesses large and and original powers, by an improper or erroneous use of which he can do serious injustice and give cause for much irritation. I think that so important an appointment should not be made hurriedly in the rush of business through a meeting of the council, but that it should be considered by the assessment committee, whose recommendation, if judicious, would no doubt be accepted by the council. It is well worth considering whether or not it would be wise and proper to publicly announce that applications for the position if sent to the chairman of the committee by a named day, would receive attention.

The statement made by Dr. Henry at the nomination meeting that the prevalence of fever in the town is due to the impurity of the drinking water, demands our most serious attention. I think that a special committee should be appointed to procure full information as to the available sources of water supply in the vicinity of the town and as to the possibility of establishing a system of water supply for domestic use, either as a corporation venture or by inducing private citizens or capitalists to take hold of the scheme. I am satisfied that good water in abundance can be procured within a short distance of the town, and that to bring it in for domestic use would prove remunerative to those investing their money in the enterprise. I would therefore urge upon you that promptness of action which the grave character of Dr. Henry's statement forces upon us as a public duty.

If the views which I have expressed upon the matters referred to, meet with your approval, I will be pleased if you will, at the meeting to be held this evening, adopt resolutions in accordance with them in order that they may be given effect to.

It will be our duty to see if we cannot, by a judicious system of encouragement to manufacturers, do something to counteract the present depression. I am not prepared to say more upon this head at present than that I will consider it my imperative duty to endeavor to effect to the utmost of my power to secure either the extension of the manufacturing industries at present existing here or the location of new ones, and in so doing I will look for the support of the council.

He kept his word and now Orangeville has a much needed piece of legislation, which, we hope, will be properly enforced. The by-law provides that all wood brought to town to be sold must be taken to the market, and no person is allowed to buy wood any place but the market before 3 P.M. each day, unless for private use. An inspector will hereafter be appointed, and he will measure and class the wood. A fee of 5c will be charged. If anybody infringes on the by-law they are liable to a fine of $20 or imprisonment for 21 days.

MISCELLANEOUS

Twenty dollars was placed to the credit of the charity committee.

The T. P. committee will deliberate on a motion to let the fair grounds by tender.

Woman's Modesty.

Many women are prevented by feelings of delicacy from consulting a physician in those disorders arising from functional derangement of her peculiarly delicate organism, and the most serious results are often caused by this neglect. To such persons Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is an especial boon, as it offers a sure and safe cure for all those distressing disorders to which women are peculiarly subject, while it saves a modest girl or woman from the embarrassment of a personal consultation with a physician. "Favorite Prescription" is the only medicine for women's peculiar weaknesses and ailments, sold by druggists under a positive guarantee from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. See guarantee on bottle wrapper.

A very sad discovery was made in the Royal hotel a week ago Saturday, when the proprietor of the house went to the bedroom of Mr. Harry Wilkins to awaken him. The host knocked at the door, but received no reply. He then went into the room, and, to his horror, found the young man dead in bed. The body was still warm when found. Corner Norton was notified, but thought it unnecessary to hold an inquest, as he believed heart disease was the cause of death. The remains were taken to Sarnia for burial. Deceased was a Freemason and was well liked by everybody. His sudden death at the age of 29 years is regretted by everyone who knew him.

BIBLE SOCIETY.

To the Editor of The Sun:

DEAR SIR:—In order to diffuse information with regard to the Bible Society, the local committee has requested me to send to you a few statements as to its aims and work for publication. I hope, you will find space in your columns:

The British and Foreign Bible Society was founded in 1804. The dearth of Bibles in Wales was in that year laid before a few Christian men assembled in the committee rooms of the Religious Tract Society in London, and upon them was pressed the great need of some means of providing that country with the Word of God. To these gentlemen it seemed that, not only was it a duty to endeavour to supply Wales with what was so precious to them, but also to take steps for the overtaking of the same work in the various countries of the world. From this the Bible Society dates its origin, and its history from that time has been one of more or less steady progress, until last year it expended over $1 000,000 in its work.

Its aim may be stated in the words of a report recently issued:—"The sole object of the society is to facilitate the wide circulation of the Holy Scripture. It seeks to provide the Word of God for all nations in such translations, forms, and places, and at such prices as to make it accessible and acceptable to preachers and teachers, missionaries and individuals, rich and poor."

As to the organization of the Society another quotation from the same source may serve to explain:—"The committee appointed at each annual meeting of the Society consists of thirty-six laymen, of whom six are foreigners residing in or near London. Of the remaining thirty, half are members of the church of England, and the rest are representatives of other denominations of Christians."

There are in various parts of the world Auxiliaries (of which the Upper Canada Bible Society, to which the Orangeville Branch belongs, is one); whose object it is to do the work of the society in their own constituencies. These auxiliaries, after deducting from the contributions received what is necessary to defray legitimate expenses, and what is devoted to colportage or other work done under their own supervision, send their funds to the parent society in London to be applied under the direction of the Central committee. The relation of the Orangeville Branch to the Upper Canada Bible Society, whose headquarters are in Toronto, is precisely that of the Upper Canada Bible Society to the parent society.

The society has been enabled to provide or help to provide at least one book of the Bible in 287 languages. It issued in the year 1888 9, 3,677,[illegible] copies, that is to say, 810 141 Bibles, 1,483 682 Testaments, and 1,383,[illegible] portions or separate books of the Bible, for the distribution of these it employs colporteurs in the various countries in which its labors are extended, and the earnest efforts of these devoted men cannot fail to accomplish much for the extension of the Kingdom of Christ.

There is provided within the constituency of each branch of the Upper Canada Bible Society a depository where a stock of Bibles and Testaments is kept for sale. In Orangeville the depository is in the charge of Mr. Thos. Stevenson.

For such a work we feel that we can safely appeal to the Christian people of Orangeville and vicinity, and look for such measure of support as God may put it into their hearts to give.

The following collectors were appointed, it will be remembered, at the annual meeting held in November last in St. Andrew's church:—

West ward—Mrs. C. M. Smith, and Mrs. W. P. King.

South ward—Mrs. Lalor, and Mrs. Turnbull.

East ward—Miss McKitrick and Miss Mercer.

North ward—Miss Kennedy and Mrs Youmans.

The local committee has also requested several ladies to act as collectors in the vicinity of the town, but these ladies not having replied as yet we cannot furnish their names. Our friends in the rural districts, however, may expect to be called upon in due time.

Some of the collectors have already done their work, and have met with an encouraging measure of success; for the rest we expect a hearty reception and generous treatment.

Yours sincerely,

JOS. L. GILMOUR,

Pres. O. B. B. S.

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER
A NEW SOOTHING TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

and, stooping, kissed him. It cost me much, but I could never have passed that corner without doing it; nor were I to live years on this earth, instead of a few short days, should I ever let another week go by without forcing my body into some such contact with what nature has sickened and man contaminated.

The pallor which I therefore undoubtedly showed upon entering Mr. Pollard's room was owing to the memory of this incident rather than to any effect which the sight of the dying man had upon me. But before I had been many minutes in the room, I found my pulse thrilling with new excitement and my manhood roused to repel a fresh influence more dangerous, if less repulsive, than the last.

Poetry.

A PRACTICAL TEST.

"Dear heart," I said, "art weary
Of this constant care and strife,
Of the days so long and dreary,
Of the mockery of life?
Would'st lay thy hands in mine, love
And close thy tired eyes,
And soar away, oh, fond dove,
In fancy to the skies?"

"Yes, dear heart, I'm weary
Of this constant care and strife,
Of the days so long and dreary,
Of the mockery of life;
And I'll close my tired eyes, love,
And in dreams I will aspire
To be a fair and fond dove,
While you can make the fire."

REST.

Out from the great world's crush and din
Out from the pain, and wrong, and sin:
Out from ambition's cruel strife;
Out from the bitter race of life;
Out from its honors and affairs;
Out from its horrors and its cares,
Again, a child, he lay at rest,
In holy peace on his mother's breast.

Her gentle hand toyed in his hair;
Her sweet, dear voice dispelled his care;
Her loving eyes shed light divine;
Her very presence made a shrine;
His throbbing arteries ceased to teem;
The madding world a sad, past dream;
Again, a child, he lay at rest,
In holy peace on his mother's breast.

A HUNDRED YEARS AGO.

A hundred years ago the birds
Were singing as they sing now;
The fields were fresh and fair, the flowers
Were springing as they spring now,
Men toiled as men are toiling now,
And moiled as men are moiling now,
And hoped as men are hoping now,
And groped as men are groping now
And died as men are dying.

One lived for love and one for gold,
And dreams of fame beguiled one,
One dwelt unwreathed by fortune's smiles,
Another, a relived one.
The moon was wont the tale to bear
That still deceives the maiden's ear
And slander spun her thread of slime
Round many a heart in that old time
That scorned to be denying.

A hundred years ago!—the graves
That mourners wet with weeping
Are lost—the mourners with their dead
Are sleeping, sleeping, sleeping!
Are sleeping as we soon shall sleep,
No more to laugh, no more to weep,
No more to hope, no more to fear,
No more to ask why we are here
A-wearying and sighing

Symptoms of Catarrh.

Dull, heavy headache, obstruction of the nasal passages, discharges falling from the head into the throat, sometimes profuse watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; the eyes are weak, watery, and inflammed; there is ringing in the ears, deafness hacking or coughing to clear the throat, expectoration of offensive matter, together with scabs from ulcers; the voice is changed and has a nasal twang; the breath is offensive; smell and taste are impaired; there is a sensation of dizziness, with mental depression, a hacking cough and general debility. If you have all, or any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from Nasal Catarrh. The more complicated your disease has become, the greater the number and diversity of symptoms. Thousands of cases annually, without manifesting half of the above symptoms, result in consumption and end in the grave. No disease is so common, more deceptive and dangerous, or less understood, or more unsuccessfully treated by physicians. Five hundred dollars reward is offered by the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy, for a case of catarrh which they cannot cure. Remedy sold by druggists at only 50 cents.

Get our price in Yarn and Tweeds before purchasing, as we have just cleared out a factory and are selling these goods less than regular wholesale price.

A Winter's Tale.

LAST winter my little girl caught a severe cold which lasted all season. I doctored with everything I could get but to no avail. Finally I got Hagyard's Pectoral Balsam and gave her two doses which improved her, and in a week she was entirely cured by its use.—MRS. C. NORMAN, Cornwall, Ont.

"La Grippe" or Lightning Catarrh.

MR. FOSTER,—"La Grippe," by Russian Ingenious, is to be—and is in reality an epidemic catarrh, and is called by some physicians "lightning catarrh," from the rapidity with which it sweeps over the country. Allow me to draw the attention of your readers to the fact that Hazel Balm, as well as has been a thorough cure for all cases of the ordinary cold in head and catarrh, will give prompt relief in even the most severe cases of "la grippe" or "Russian influenza," as it will effectually clear the nasal passages, allay irritation and relieve the dull, oppressive headache accompanying the disease. No family should be without a bottle of Hazel Balm to the house, as cold in the head and catarrh are peculiarly liable to attack people at this season of the year, and Hazel Balm is the only prompt and speedy cure for these troubles ever offered the public. Easy to use and agreeable. If you cannot get it at your dealers it will be sent post free on receipt of price (50 cents and $1 per bottle) by addressing

Best of All

Cough medicines, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is in greater demand than ever. No preparation for Throat and Lung Troubles is so prompt in its effects, so agreeable to the taste, and so widely known as this. It is the family medicine in thousands of households.

"I have suffered for years from a bronchial trouble that, whenever I take cold, or am exposed to inclement weather, shows itself by a very annoying tickling sensation in the throat and by difficulty in breathing. I have tried a great many remedies, but none does so well as Ayer's Cherry Pectoral which always gives prompt relief in returns of my old complaint."—Ernest A. Hepler, Inspector of Public Roads, Parish Terre Bonne, La.

"I consider Ayer's Cherry Pectoral a most important remedy

For Home Use.

I have tested its curative power, in my family, many times during the past thirty years, and have never known it to fail. It will relieve the most serious affections of the throat and lungs, whether in children or adults."—Mrs. E. G. Edgerly, Council Bluffs, Iowa.

"Twenty years ago I was troubled with a disease of the lungs. Doctors afforded me no relief and considered my case hopeless. I then began to use Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and, before I had finished one bottle, found relief. I continued to take this medicine until a cure was effected. I believe that Ayer's Cherry Pectoral saved my life."—Samuel Griggs, Waukegan, Ill.

"Six years ago I contracted a severe cold which settled on my lungs and soon developed all the alarming symptoms of Consumption. I had a cough, night sweats, bleeding of the lungs, pains in chest and sides, and was so prostrated as to be confined to my bed most of the time. After trying various prescriptions, without benefit, my physician finally determined to give me Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I took it, and the effect was magical. I seemed to rally from the first dose of this medicine, and, after using only three bottles, am as well and sound as ever."—Rodney Johnson, Springfield, Ill.

THE SUN
FOR
1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN's opinions about men and things, and some people don't; everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose; it is not THE SUN's fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is a duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out with THE SUN.

HOSPITAL REMEDIES
WILL GIVE YOU
HEALTH!
A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE.

The four principal medical institutions of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These often have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards, under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world visit and practise here, and the institutions are crowded of all classes. Among the patronage received by the proprietors of these hospitals, which is a sign of trading with the opportunities afforded to the public by the special remedies prepared expressly received for the patronage of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attendance of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the common patent medicines that flood the market and absorb a fortune in every ill from a single bottle. The great always fail for a reliable class of domestic remedies to meet, filled with purest medicinals. This stays the demand, and HOSPITAL REMEDIES make no unreasonable claims. The specific for CATARRH cures that and nothing else; so with the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLES; RHEUMATISM is cured by No. 3, while troubles of DIGESTION, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their own cure. To those in a chill or specific for FEVER and AGUE, one for FEMALE WEAKNESS—a GENERAL TONIC and BLOOD-MAKER that makes a bloom and LIVER PAIN AND FULNESS, and an incomparable remedy for NERVOUS DEBILITY.

Poetry.

ALWAYS A RIVER TO CROSS.

There is always a river to cross,
Always an effort to make,
If there is anything good to win,
Any rich prize to take;
Yonder's the truth we crave;
Yonder the charming scene,
But deep and wide with a troubled tide,
Is the river that lies between.

For the treasures of precious worth
We must patiently dig and dive
For the places we hope to fill
We must plod and struggle and drive;
And always and everywhere,
We'll find in our onward course,
Theme for the foot, and trials to meet,
And a difficult river to cross.

The rougher the way we take,
The sturdier the hearts and nerve,
The stones in our path we break,
Nor o'er from our impulse swerve?
For the glory we hope to win,
Our labors we count no loss;
'Tis folly to pause and murmur, because
Of the river we have to cross.

So, ready to do and to dare,
Should we in our places stand,
Fulfilling the soul's demand,
For, though as the mountains high
The billows may roar and toss,
They'll not overwhelm if the Lord's at the helm

THE MILL MYSTERY.

CHAPTER XVIII.—Continued.

A LAST REQUEST.

'Tis she
That tempers him to this extremity.
—Richard III.

Let me see if I can make it plain to you Mr. Pollard, whom we have all known as an excellent but somewhat weak man, lay with his face turned toward the room, and his gaze fixed with what I felt to be more than the common anxiety of the dying upon mine. At his side sat his wife, cold, formidable, alert, her hand on his hand, her eye on his eye, and all the icy and implacable will set, as I could plainly see, between and any comfort or encouragement I might endeavor to impart. She even allowed her large and commanding figure to usurp the place usually accorded me on such occasions, and when, after a futile effort or so on my part to break down the barrier of restraint that such a presence necessarily imposed, I arose from my seat at the foot of the bed, and approaching closer, would have leaned over her husband, but she put out her hand and imperatively waved me aside, remarking:

"The doctor says he must have air."

There are some persons whose looks and words are strangely controlling. Mrs Pollard is one of these, and I naturally drew back. But a glance at Mr. Pollard's face made me question if I was doing right in this. Such disappointment, such despair even, I had seldom seen expressed in a look; and convinced that he had something of real purport to say to me, I turned towards his wife, and resolutely remarked:

"The dying frequently have communications to make to which only their pastor's ear is welcome. Will you excuse me then, if I request a moment's solitude with Mr. Pollard, that I may find out if his soul is at rest before I raise my prayers in his behalf?"

But, before I had finished, I saw that any such appeal would be unavailing. If her immovable expression had not given me this assurance, the hopeless closing of his weak and fading eyes would have sufficiently betrayed the fact.

"I cannot leave Mr. Pollard," were the words with which she tempered her refusal. "If he has any communication to make, let him make it in my presence. I am his wife." And her hand pressed more firmly on his, and her eyes, which had not stirred from his face even when I addressed her, assumed a dark, if not threatening look, which gradually forced his to open and meet them.

I felt that something must be done. "Mr. Pollard," said I, 'is there any thing you wish to impart to me before you die? If so, speak up freely and with confidence, for I am here to do a friend and a pastor's duty by you, even to the point of fulfilling any request you may have to make, so it be only actuated by right feeling and judgment," and determinedly ignoring her quick move of astonishment, I pressed forward and bent over him, striving with what I felt to be a purely righteous motive, to attract his glance from here, which was slowly withering him away as if it were a basilisk's.

And I succeeded. After an effort that brought the sweat out on his brow, he turned his look on mine, and, gathering strength from my expression, probably, gave me one eager and appealing glance, and thrust his left hand under his pillow.

His wife, who saw every thing, leaned forward with an uneasy gesture.

"What have you there?" she asked.

But he had already drawn forth a little book and placed it in my hand.

"Only my old prayer book," he faltered. "I felt as if I should like Mr. Barrows to have it."

She gave him an incredulous stare, and allowed her glance to follow the book. I immediately put it in my pocket.

"I shall take a great deal of pleasure in possessing it," I remarked.

"Read it," he murmured; "read it carefully." And a tone of relief was in his voice that caused to alarm her greatly; for the half rose to her feet and made a gesture to some one I did not see, after which she bent again towards the dying man and whispered in his ear:

But, though her manner had all its wonted force, and her words, whatever they were, were looking in neither ear unless my purpose, he did not seem to be affected by them. For the first time in his life, perhaps, he rose superior to that insidious influence, and, moved by the near approach of death, kept his gaze fixed on mine, and finally ejaculated:

"Will you do something else for me?"

"I will," I began, and might have said more, but he turned from me and with sudden energy addressed his wife.

"Margaret," said he, "bring me my desk."

Had a thunderbolt fallen at her feet, she could not have looked more astonished. I myself was somewhat surprised; I had never heard that tone from him before.

"My desk!" he cried again; "I want it here."

At this repetition of his request, uttered this time with all the vehemence of despair, Mrs. Pollard moved, though she did not rise. At the same moment a quick, soft step was heard, and, through the gloom of the now rapidly darkening chamber, I saw their younger son draw near and take his stand at the foot of the bed.

"I have but a few minutes," murmured the sick man. "Will you refuse to make them comfortable, Margaret?"

"No, no," she answered hastily, guided as I could not but see by an almost imperceptible movement of her son's hand; and rising with a great show of compliance, she proceeded to the other end of the room. I at once took her place by the side of his pillow.

"Is there no word of comfort I can give you?" said I, anxious for the soul thus tortured by earthly anxieties on the very brink of the grave.

But his mind, filled with one thought, refused to entertain any other.

"Pray God that my strength hold out," he whispered. "I have an act of reparation to make." Then, as his son made a move as if to advance, he caught my hand in his, and drew my ear down to his mouth. "The book," he gasped; "keep it safely—they may try to take it away—don't——"

But here his son intervened with some word of warning; and Mrs. Pollard, hurriedly approaching, laid the desk on the bed in such a way that I was compelled to draw back.

But this did not seem to awaken in him any special distress. From the instant his eyes fell upon the desk, a feverish strength seemed to seize him, and looking up at me with something of his old brightness of look and manner, he asked to have it opened and its contents taken out.

Naturally embarrassed at such a request, I turned to Mrs. Pollard.

"It seems a strange thing for me to do," I began; but a lightning glance had already passed between her and her son, and with the cold and haughty dignity for which she is remarkable, she calmly stopped me with a quiet wave of her hand.

"The whims of the dying must be respected," she remarked, and seated herself in her old place at his side.

I at once proceeded to empty the desk. It contained mainly letters, and one legal-looking document, which I took to be his will. As I lifted this out, I saw mother and son both cast him a quick glance, as if they expected some move on his part. But though his hands trembled somewhat, he made no special sign of wishing to see or touch it, and at once I detected on their faces a look of surprise that soon took on the character of dismay, as with the lifting of the last paper from the desk he violently exclaimed,

"Now break in the button and take out the paper you will find there. It is my last will and testament, and by every sacred right you hold in this world, I charge you to carry it to Mr. Nicholls, and see that no man nor woman touches it till you give it into his hands."

"His will!" echoed Mrs. Pollard, astonished.

"He don't know what he says. This is his will," she was probably going to assert, for her hand was pointing to the legal looking document I have before mentioned; but a gesture from her son made her stop before the last word was uttered. "He must be wandering in his mind," she declared. "We know of no will hidden away in his desk. Ah!"

The last exclamation was called forth by the sudden slipping into view of a folded paper from between the crevices of the desk. I had found the secret spring. The next instant the bottom fell out, and the paper slipt to the floor. I was quick to recover it. Had I not been, Mrs. Pollard would have had it in her grasp. As it was, our hands met, not without a shock, I fear, on either side. A gasp of intense suspense came from the bed.

"Keep it," the dying eyes seemed to say; and if mine spoke as plainly as his did, they answered with full as much meaning and force.

"I will."

Guy Pollard and his mother looked at each other, then at the pocket into which I had already thrust the paper. The dying man followed their glances, and with a final exertion of strength, raised himself on his elbow.

"My curse on him or her who seeks to step between me and the late reparation I have sought to make. Weaker than most men, I have submitted to your will, Margaret, up to this hour, but your reign is over at last, and——and——" The passionate words died away, the interim energy succumbed, and with one last look into my face, Samuel Pollard fell back upon his pillow—dead.

CHAPTER XIX.

A FATAL DELAY.

Would'st thou have that
Which thou esteem'st the ornament of life,
And live a coward in thine own esteem,
Letting "I dare not," wait upon "I would,"
Like the poor cat i' the adage?
—MACBETH.

He was to all appearances immediately forgotten. As with mutual unease we all turned and freed each other, Mrs. Pollard with a stern, inexorable look in her dark eye, which, while it held me enchained, caused me to involuntarily lay my hand upon the document which I had hidden in my breast. She noticed the movement, and smiled darkly with a side-long look at her son. The smile and look affected me strangely. In them I seemed to detect something deeper than hatred and baffled rage, and when in a moment later her son responded to her glance by quietly withdrawing from the room, I felt such revolt against their secrecy that for a moment I was tempted to abandon an undertaking that promised to bring me in conflict with passions of so deep and unrelenting a nature.

But the impression which the pain and despair of my dead friend had made upon me was as yet too recent for me to yield to my first momentary apprehensions; and summoning up what resolution I possessed, I took my leave of Mrs. Pollard, and was hastening to words the door, when her voice, rising cold and clear, arrested me.

"You think, then, that it is your duty to carry this paper from the house, Mr Barrows?"

"Yes, madam, I do," was my short reply.

"In spite of my protest and that of my son?"

"Yes, madam."

"Then upon your head be the consequences!" she exclaimed, and turned her back upon me with a look which went with me as I closed the door between us; lending a gloom to the unlighted halls and sombre staircases that affected me almost with an impulse of fear.

I dreaded crossing into where the stairs descended; I dreaded going down them into the darkness which I saw below. Not that I anticipated actual harm, but that I felt I was in the house of those who longed to see me the victim of it; and my imagination being more than usually alert, I even found myself fancying the secret triumph with which Guy Pollard would hail an incautious slip on my part, that would precipitate me from the top to the bottom of this treacherous staircase. That he was somewhere between me and the front door, I felt certain. The deadly quiet behind and before me seemed to assure me of this; and, ashamed as I was of the impulse that moved me, I could not prevent myself from stepping cautiously as I prepared to descend, saying as some sort of excuse to myself: 'He is capable of seeing me trip without assistance,' and as my imagination continued its work: "He is even capable of putting out his foot to help forward such a catastrophe."

And, indeed, I now think that if this simple plan had presented itself to his subtle mind, of stunning, if not disabling me, and thus making it possible for them to obtain his father's will without an open assault, he would not have hesitated to embrace it. But he evidently did not calculate, as I did, the chances of such an act, or perhaps he felt that I was likely to be too much upon my guard to fall a victim to this expedient, for I met no one as I advanced, and was well down the stairs and on my way to the front door, before I perceived any signs of life in the sombre house. Then a sudden glare of light across my path betrayed the fact that a door had been swung wide in a certain short passage that opened ahead of me; and while I involuntarily stopped, a shadow creeping along the further wall of that passage warned me that some one—I could not doubt it to be Guy Pollard—had come out to meet me.

The profound stillness, and the sudden pause which the shadow made as I inconsiderately stumbled in my hesitation, assured me that I was right in attributing a sinister motive to this encounter. Naturally, therefore, I drew back, keeping my eyes upon the shadow. It did not move. Convinced now that the danger of some kind lay ahead of me, I looked behind and about me for some means of escaping from the house without passing by my half seen enemy. But none presented themselves. Either I must slink away into the kitchen region—a proceeding from which my whole manhood revolted,—or I must advance and face whatever evil awaited me. Desperation drove me to the latter course. Making one bound, I stood before the lighted passage. A slim, firm figure confronted me; but it was not that of Guy, but of his older brother, Dwight.

The surprise of the shock, together with a certain revelation which came to me at the same moment, and of which I will speak hereafter, greatly unnerved me. I had not been thinking of Dwight Pollard. Strange as it may seem, I had not even missed him from the bedside of his father. To see him, then, here and now, caused many thoughts to spring into my mind, foremost among which was the important one as to whether he was of a nature to lend himself to any scheme of violence. The quickness with which I decided to the contrary proved to me in what different estimation I had always held him from what I had his mother and brother.

It was consequently no surprise to me when he leaned forward and spoke to me with consideration and force. I was only surprised at his words:

"Don't stop, Mr. Barrows," said he. "Go home at once; hurry"—and here he paused, listened, then proceeded with increased emphasis, "don't go by the way of Orchard street." And without waiting for my reply, he stepped back and noiselessly regained the apartment he had left, while I, in a confusion of emotions difficult to analyze at the moment, hastily accepted his advice, and withdrew from the house.

The relief of breathing the fresh air again was indescribable. If I had not escaped the miasma and oppression of a prison, I certainly had left behind me influences of darkness and sinister suggestions which, in the light of the calm moonbeams that I found flooding the world without, had the effect upon me of a vanished horror. Only I was still haunted by that last phrase which I had heard uttered, "Don't go by the way of Orchard street," an injunction which simply meant, "Don't go with that document to the lawyer's to night."

Now was this order, given as it was by Dwight Pollard, one of warning or of simple threat? My good will towards this especial member of the Pollard family inclined me to think it the former.

There was danger, then, lurking for me somewhere on the road to Mr. Nicholls' house. Was it my duty to encounter this danger? It appears to me not, especially as it was not necessary for me to acquit myself so instantly of the commission with which I had been entrusted. I accordingly proceeded directly home.

But once again in my familiar study, I became conscious of a strong dissatisfaction with myself. Indeed, I may speak more forcibly and say I was conscious of a loss of trust in my own manhood, which was at once so new and startling that it was as if a line had been drawn between my past and present. This was due to the discovery I had made at the moment I had confronted Dwight Pollard—a discovery so humiliating in its character that it had shaken me, body and soul. I had found in the light of that critical instant that I, David Barrows, was a coward! Yes, gloss it over as I would, the knowledge was deep in my mind that I lacked manhood's most virile attribute; that peril, real or imaginary, could awaken in me fear; and that the paling cheek and trembling limbs of which I had been so bitterly conscious at that instant were but the outward signs of a weakness that extended deep down into my soul.

It was a revelation calculated to stagger any man, how much more then, one who had so relied upon his moral powers as to take upon himself the sacred name of minister. But this was not all. I had not only found myself to be a coward, but I had shown myself such to another's eyes. By the searching look which Dwight Pollard had given me before he spoke, and the quiet, half disdainful curve which his lips took at the close of his scrutiny, I was convinced that he saw the defect in my nature, and despised me for it, even while he condescended to offer me the protection which my fears seemed to demand. Or—the thought could come now that I was at home, and had escaped the dangers lying in wait for me on the road to my duty—he had made use of my weakness to gain his own ends. The carrying of that document to Mr. Nicholls meant loss of property to them all per haps, and he had but taken means, consistent with his character, to insure the delay which his brother had possibly planned to gain in some more reprehensible manner. And I had yielded to my fears and let his will have its way. I hated myself as I considered my own weakness. I could find no excuse either for my pusillanimity or for that procrastination of my duty into which it had betrayed me. I found I could not face my own scorn; and, rising from my study chair, I took my hat and went out. I had determined to make amends for my fault by going at once to Orchard street.

And I did; but alas! for the result! The half-hour I had lost was fatal. To be sure I met with no adventure on my way, but I found Mr Nicholls out. He had been summoned by a telegram to Boston, and had been absent from the house only fifteen minutes. I meditated following him to the station but the whistle sounded just as I turned away from his door, and I knew I should be too late. Humiliated still further in my own estimation, I went home to wait with what patience I could for the two or three days which must elapse before his return.

Before I went to bed that night I opened the book which Mr. Pollard had given me, in the expectation of finding a letter in it, or, at least, some writing on the title page or the blank pages of the book. But I was disappointed in both regards. With the exception of some minute pencil marks scattered here and there along the text—indications, doubtless, of favorite passages—I perceived nothing in the volume to account for the extreme earnestness with which he had presented it.

Max O'Rell's Jonathan and his Continent, has sold over 100,000 copies.

Ouida has made more money than any woman of the present century except Patti.

Fanny J. Crosby, of New York, the writer of "Down Near of Prayer," and many other hymns is an invalid, and has been blind from her birth.

Oliver Wendell Holmes, Rev. Samuel May and Rev. S. F. Smith dined together in Boston recently. They were graduated from Harvard in the class of 1829, of which eleven members now survive.

Edna Lyall, whose latest book, A. Hardy Norseman, is being widely read, says that if she has favorite authors they are Kingsley and F. D. Maurice. Of poets she is especially fond of Tennyson, Mrs. Browning and Whittier.

A. R. Spofford, the Librarian of Congress, has a phenomenal knowledge of books. What he does not know about them is not worth knowing, yet he is not a recluse nor a book worm, enjoying life and mingling freely in society.

E. L. Bynner, author of Begum's Daughter, is described as "a wholesome and same man with a certain out-of-doors air about him that is refreshing in these days when it is so rare." Rather hard on the sallow faced, lean-fingered, melancholy-eyed writers of today, is it not?

Jules Verne is prevented from writing by the accident which befel him some years ago. His nephew became violently insane and shot at the novelist and the wound has never properly healed. Verne writes two novels every year, and is now engaged upon his 74th.

An electric light in the St. Petersburg Imperial Palace suddenly flickered and almost went out. The Emperor sprang to his feet with cries of alarm, and was prostrated for hours by the fright received. The terrible anxiety of the Czar's life makes his diadem too heavy for his brow.

Archduchess Maria Theresa, of Austria, is spoken of as one of the most charming women in Europe. She is a daring horse woman, and enjoys a freedom of action allowed to few women so near thrones. Her salon is thronged with distinguished men and women, and she welcomes warmly and gracefully literary men, artists and musicians.

Mrs. Day, arrested in Michigan on the supposition that she was the famous "Old Mrs. Bender," has become insane. The charge had weighed heavily on her mind, and old age accompanied by the hardships of jail life, turned her mind.

A JEALOUS WOMAN'S SUICIDE.

NEW YORK, Jan. 24.—Jessie Dean Reynolds, 28 years of age, the wife of Wm. R. Reynolds, committed suicide this morning at her home on 9th avenue by shooting herself through the heart with a revolver. She was a daughter of Andrew Glaisford, an actor. Mrs. Reynolds went on the stage when she was a child under the name of Jessie Dean, and was known as "The Child Actress." She grew into a beautiful woman, and five years ago married Reynolds, who was then an actor. Mrs. Reynolds has for a long time been insanely jealous of her husband.

The Indians of Ontario, Quebec, Manitoba, British Columbia and the North west, experienced on the whole a successful season in 1889. Their great crops were of excellent quality, and as a rule abundant, and while, with the exception of British Columbia and Quebec, their root crops were not as heavy as usual, they gave a fair return. In the new provinces considerably more extensive areas were brought under cultivation during the year 1888-89, and the system of summer fallowing land seemed to be more generally practised than formerly and with beneficial results.

GRIT NOTIONS OF ECONOMY.

(London Free Press.)

SCARCELY a session of Parliament passes without a good deal of side being raised by the Opposition respecting what is termed "the extravagance of the Government." This is, of course, a very convenient term, so general, however, in its character as to mean little or nothing. Mr. McMullen has on time in this session is moving for an elaborate return, showing what every minister of the crown has cost the country since Confederation, and now for the purpose of placing emphasis to their wild waste of public money. He said enough to imply that a shriek of startled indignation would arise from an economy loving public if a comprehensive statement could be prepared, from which, with one sweep of the eye, the total expenditure by each minister could be seen. It may not be exactly relevant to intimate that Mr. McMullen is the same gentleman who displayed such a spasmodic interest last year in the problem of what becomes of the old carpets, but it may serve to show that he has started out on a higher plane this session. His motion did not prevail in the House. It was pointed out that the public accounts afford all the information called for. Sir John Macdonald explained that the cost of legislation was an expenditure far beyond the outlay made by Ministers of the Crown, and it was just such returns as that moved for by Mr McMullen which unnecessarily augmented the expenses of each session. The hindrance to public business interposed by the Opposition, not in the legitimate discharge of their functions, but in factious opposition has always representated a needless waste of public money. It will be a long while before the recollection of the course pursued by the Liberals with relation to the Franchise Bill passes from public mind. It will be remembered for a long time that in 1 at debate Mr Mills spoke 135 times and that for three months the Opposition sought to gain their point by exhausting the physical endurance of the Government. The failure of those tactics may happily prevent the repition of such a scene, but there is still a large annual expenditure as the result of needless inquiries, unnecessary returns demanded and the prolongation of debates having only as an object the worrying of the Government. If Mr. McMullen would turn his attention from cob-lore and moth-eaten carpets to the problem of expediting the conduct of public business, he would be doing a worthy service. As it is, his efforts do not meet with that approbation which could be said to be encouraging.

PARNELL'S VICTORY.

The London "Times" Pays Him $25,000 for Its Libels.

LONDON, February 3.—The trial of the suit for libel brought by Mr. Parnell against the Times was to have begun to day, but when the case was called the counsels said that the suit had been compromised, the Times paying Parnell £5,000 damages. The withdrawal was also announced of the action brought by Henry Campbell, Mr Parnell's private secretary, against the Times for damages for statements affecting Campbell made by Attorney General Webster, counsel for the Times, in his opening speech in the case of O Donnell against Walter, proprietor of the Times, and for charges made against the plaintiff in an editorial published by the Times in July, 1888. The court room was crowded. Mr Parnell was present and looked well. The announcement of the results of the actions caused a sensation.

It is stated that the Times will pay Campbell £200 damages besides meeting all the costs of this action.

The Times says upon the Parnel case: "After our withdrawal of the charges it was clear we had no legal defence therefore on a litigantly was open to us but to come to terms or abide by the verdict of the jury. As we had at the outset challenged such action we cannot complain at having been taken at our word."

EDITORIAL NOTES.

AT the Lennox Liberal Conservative convention, the following resolution was passed:—

SENATOR John Macdonald died at his residence in Toronto on Tuesday evening.

HON. MR. MASSON, ex-Lieutenant Governor of Quebec, has been elevated to the Senate.

THURSDAY Feb. 20 has been chosen as polling day in Haldimand. Dr. Montague will reclaim his seat and Mr. Coulter will retire from politics.

THE Nomination to fill the vacancy in Haldimand for the House of Commons has been fixed for February 13, and polling on the 20th.

THE Ontario Assembly commenced its last session for the present term on Thursday. It is expected that the general elections will take place about June.

REV FATHER MORRELL, in his address to the St. Ann's Young Men's Society in Montreal, assured his hearers that the antidote to Anarchism and Socialism was to be found in the Catholic Church. He paid a very high tribute to Protestant Young Men's Christian Association.

SEVERAL of the county councils have recently passed resolutions in favor of the establishment of a National Currency. On Thursday the county councils of Middlesex and York gave in their adhesion to that system.

A NEW YORK paper describes Windsor as a "conservative old place, full of the bankerism, the prejudices and the exaggerated loyalty which prevail in Ontario." This is rather hard on Mr. Whites constituency.

MONTAGUE AND COULTER.—Hamilton's next polling day is fixed for February 20th, nomination being on February 13th. The writ has been issued directed to Mr Rotenbourh, returning officer. The organizers of both parties have been in Ottawa the greater part of the time since Mr. Dolton was unseated and are no doubt well primed for the contest.

THE association realizes with pride and pleasure its unalterable confidence in W. R. Meredith, M. P., leader of the Provincial Opposition, and applauds his statesmanlike views on current political topics. We believe the time is near at hand when in this province government for the party will be forced to give place to government for the people.

THE election in Kildonan, Man., to fill the vacancy in the Provincial Legislature caused by the death of the Hon. J. Norquay, took place on Monday, and resulted in the return of Mr. Thos. Norquay by a majority of 183 over Mr. Taylor, the Government candidate. This shows the feeling in Manitoba against the Greenway administration, and in the event of a general election it would be hopelessly beaten. At the last general election the late John Norquay was returned by a majority of only two votes.

ANARCHIST JOHN MOST has refused with scorn and indignation an offer of $200 a week on the condition that he would edit his paper within the precincts of a Bowery museum. His great contrears with equanimity all manner of abuse and persecution from the minions of capital, but to be looked upon as a museum freak outrages his most tender susceptibilities.

THE session of the Manitoba Legislature was opened on Tuesday. The Speech from the Throne contained no announcement of the Government's policy regarding the Separate schools, the only reference to educational matters being a very brief statement to the effect that a new School Act will be introduced. The withdrawal of the French members from the Government caucus, however, indicates the nature of the proposed legislation.

IT is evident upon good authority that Mr. McMullen moves for more useless returns than any other six members of Parliament. His notorious penchant in this direction was made to appear ridiculous the other day, when a return asked for respecting the amount of savings bank deposits was presented, consisting simply of a couple of pages clipped from the Canada Gazette and pasted on foolscap. Mr. McMullen would not condescend to refer to the official publication for the information. He declares he is "no bookworm."

THE changes in the Globe consequent on the purchase of the Nelson interest by a syndicate of prominent Canadian principally residents of Toronto who have long been financially and largely interested in the Globe," will not be made until the adjourned annual meeting, fixed for next month. So far the syndic te is known to include Mr. Jaffray, Sir Richard Cartwright and H Cook. Mr Murock is not in the deal. Mr Nelson did not get 25 cents on the dollar. One authority said yesterday that he is, however, to have a renewal of his interest in the school book monopoly for another five years.—World.

DEATH OF JAS. H. AIKEN.

The Omaha, Neb., Merchants' Criterion has this to say regarding the death of Mr. Jas. H Aiken son of Mr. John Aiken, of this town:

"The many friends of Jas. H. Aiken, one of Omaha's most popular knights of the grip will be greatly pained to learn of his sudden death, which occurred at Franklin, Neb., where he made his temporary headquarters, the 16th ult. For ten years he has been with D M Steele & Co. He started in as bookkeeper but left the office to go on the road where he was always very successful. Last week we noted the fact of his departure from the city to resume his old run in Western Nebraska and Colorado. He was not feeling well when he left and went rather against the protest of his house, but he thought he was just recovering from la grippe, instead of which he was just coming down with typhoid-pneumonia, which rapidly developed as ill and culminated in his death. His body will be sent to Orangeville, Ontario—his old home, where his father and mother now reside, for interment. He was about thirty five years of age and unmarried. In the death of Mr. Aiken Messrs. D. M. Steele & Co. lose a faithful salesman; the commercial fraternity a well loved brother; and the business world a man honored and respected wherever he was known. For a short time wid heal the cort and new laces and new hands replace the loss, but to that old father and mother in far away Ontario the blow comes with irreparable and crushing force. And in their sorrowing hearts goes out the sympathy born in many of us, of kindred experience. Words are but feeble interpreters of feeling at such a time, as this but if we could but reach out our hands to theirs, one hearty clasp would tell more than volumes can, the common sorrow which all six our hearts. Yes, poor Jim Aiken has left the road. He has taken his last sample, made his last sale, taken his last trip. Ah, friend, dear friend, when you and I have made our last sale, and taken our last trip, when the sweet merry bells shall ring their happy notes for others joy and other feet glide down the polished floors, may there be those still left for us who shall wipe their tears and say, 'We miss them so.'"

GIVE THEM A WIDE BERTH.—A sensible exchange advises the public to give peddlers the cold shake. Their interests are of no concern to you. They take money out and leave none. They have no business reputation to sustain and are more likely to skim you than not. There is absolutely not one single advantage in buying from a peddler, therefore give the itinerants the shake. Th ro is not an article they sell that cannot be bought as cheap of the dealers in your own town, who pay taxes and help to build it up, while the peddlers do nothing for us. Trade with the merchants and let the peddlers go.

She resided in little York (Toronto), but subsequently went to Springfield; and then came to Orangeville in 1850. Mrs Irwin was hale and hearty until a few days before her demise. She was a respectable and well known lady, and her death is regretted by many. The funeral will leave her late residence, First street at two o'clock to day (Thursday).

LA GRIPPE.—Some experiences with the fashionable complaint are thus described by the Walthy Chronicle:—Having suffered from the prevailing influenza three weeks ago, we can say a few words regarding it. In the first place it attacks the aristocratic portion of the community first, a fact which may be attested by the way it jumped upon us two weeks ahead of any person else in town, in fact, at the same time it seized the crowned heads of Europe. In the second place it catches its victims in the back and follows the bone in all directions. Then it lays one out—ordinary people one day, people like ourselves four days, clergymen, lawyers, doctors, etc., three days, members of Parliament, municipal councillors, public officials, etc., two days. It all goes according to social degree; the higher one's station the longer the attack. In fact it seems as if this plague came round for the special purpose of determining people's social standing."

A PUMP FACTORY CONSUMED.—At about 6.30 o'clock last Friday morning the citizens were awakened from their peaceful slumb rs by the furious ringing of the firebell. Upon investigation it was found that Jas. M. Wilson's pump factory, situated on west Broadway, was the scene of the conflagration. The firemen were soon upon the spot and the lines of hose were quickly laid. The water had hardly been turned on, when a length of hose bursted. The defective hose was quickly replaced and the water turned on again. After an hour's hard work the fire was completely extinguished, but not before the structure was all but gutted. The building belonged to Reeve Wansbrough, of Amaranth, and was insured in the Lancashire for $500. Mr. Wilson had his stock of pumps, etc insured for $1000.

FATAL FALL FROM A TREE.—Andrew Schario, a bright lad of 12 years, son of Wm. Schario, who works in Burr Bros. factory, in Guelph, came to an outlandy end last Sunday afternoon. The boy had been to church, and after coming home went with his brother Bernard to take a walk. They fell in with two other boys and commenced playing in the neighborhood of Hatch's old farm, when they espied a squirrel run from one of the buildings and, immediately gave chase. The little animal took refuge in a large willow tree and Andr. Schario, without hesitation, mounted after it. When up about 35 or 40 feet, where the willow branches off, the squirrel took refuge on an outlying branch. Schario attempted to reach it, and placed one foot firmly in the crotch of the tree and grip of the branch which the squirrel was on with his hand and commenced shaking it vigorously, the result being that the branch broke and the boy lost his balance and fell. About ten feet down he struck against a limb of the tree, which somewhat broke the fall, and from there bounded on the ground, alighting on his left side. The boy was picked up insensible, blood oozing from his mouth, nose and ears. He never rallied and died on Monday morning about six o'clock.—Fergus News Record.

Can a Man Swallow a Cannon-ball?

Well, "that depends." He can if his throat is large enough and the cannon-ball not too large. The question really means worthy of some consideration in view of the size of some pills that prescribed for suffering humanity. Why not throw them "to the dogs," and take Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets? Small, sugar-coated, purely vegetable, perfectly harmless, in glass, and always fresh.

A boarding house beat was yesterday sentenced to 60 days imprisonment at Hamilton.

Don't You Know

that you cannot afford to neglect that catarrh? Don't you know that it may lead to consumption, to insanity, to death? Don't you know that it can be easily cured? Don't you know that while the thousand and one nostrums you have tried have utterly failed, that Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy is a certain cure? It has stood the test of years, and there are hundreds of thousands of grateful men and women in all parts of the country who can testify to its efficacy. All druggists.

A Favorable Verdict.

Mr. J. S. George, Tottenham, Ont., writes:—"I have been troubled with catarrh for five years. Seeing Nasal Balm advertised I procured a bottle, and although I have only used part of it, I do not hesitate to pronounce it the best remedy in the world for catarrh. It is easy and pleasant to use, instant in giving relief, stops the droppings from the head into the throat and removes all the symptoms of catarrh and cold in the head. In fact if the directions are faithfully followed nothing but a cure and permanent cure can be result.

"La Grippe" or Lightning Catarrh.

MR. EDITOR,—"La Grippe," or Russian Influenza, as it is termed, is in reality an epidemic catarrh, and is called by some physicians "lightning catarrh," from the rapidity with which it sweeps over the country. Allow us to draw the attention of your readers to the fact that Nasal Balm, as well as been a thorough cure for all cases of the ordinary cold in head and catarrh, will give prompt relief in even the most severe cases of "la grippe" or "Russian influenza," as it will effectually clear the nasal passages, allay irritation and relieve the dull, oppressive headache accompanying the disease. No family should be without a bottle of Nasal Balm in the house, as cold in the head and catarrh are peculiarly liable to attack people at this season of the year; and Nasal Balm is the only prompt and speedy cure for these troubles ever offered the public. Easy to use and agreeable. If you cannot get it at your dealers it will be sent post free on receipt of price (50 cents

Best—Dancing.—A very pleasant social dance took place on Tuesday afternoon at the residence of Mr. Jas. Cameron, Caledon, when his youngest daughter, Mary, was united in the sacred bonds of wedlock, with George Bell, M. D., of Chicago. The ceremony, which was witnessed by a few intimate friends of the contracting parties, was performed by the Rev. Mr. Silman. The bride was attended by Miss Jennie McMillan and Miss Florence Dick. Dr. Little, of Toronto, was groomsman. The young couple received the hearty congratulations of many friends and acquaintances, and left by the evening train for Chicago.

Have differed in all climes and ages."
But I have found no difference of opinion among the female sages who have used Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription as a remedy for the weaknesses and ailments peculiar to their sex. "Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of prolapsus, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, leucorrhœa and bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration, inflammation, pain and tenderness. HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.—Nervousness and want of Energy.—When first the nerves feel wearing, and listlessness supplants energy, it is the right time to take some alterative Holloway's Pills to prevent disorder running into disease. These excellent Pills correct all irregularities and weaknesses. They act so kindly, yet so effectually on the functions of digestion and assimilation, that the whole body is revived, the blood is rendered richer and purer, the muscles become firmer and stronger and the nervous and absorbent systems are invigorated. These Pills are suitable for all classes and ages. They have a most marvellous effect upon persons who are out of condition; they soon rectify whatever is in fault, restore strength to the body and confidence to the mind.

Poetry.

OUR FAMILY CIRCLE.

This is it works from day to day,
It doesn't have a word to say
Concerning who shall spend his pay?
That's me
Who is it runs an awful bill
And buys just what and when the will
And always drains the family till?
My wife.
Who is it schoolboy for a fight
And puts the household in a fright
And keeps us out of bed at night?
Our baby.
Who keeps all of us with ease
And does exactly as she pleases
And when housecleaning comes she leaves?
Our hired girl.

WHAT WILL IT MATTER?

What will it matter when I die
What I have done in former years,
Whether my life is mean and low,
Whether you cared for none you know
Serving yourself and only need,
Has I aught for hearts that break and bleed.

A word of yours might chance to be
A source of strength to some sad soul
When storms are high and billows roll;
Telling Him who stilled the sea
And hushed the storm on Galilee.

A kindly act of yours might lie
A corner-stone in some true breast,
On which a noble life might rest—
Though hidden from the human eye,
It holds the turrets to the sky.

Your life might be a simple song,
Whose mellow music, day by day,
Flows freely forth into the way
Reaching some souls that pass along,
Making them joyous, pure and strong.

There is no life, however low,
But has some useful work to do,
But can some worthy aim pursue,
The humblest one can never know
How far the loving heart-beats go.

For 'tis not gold alone we need
In the wide world's great human strife
But more of love in human life,
While honor cheers the chiefs who lead,
Love stoops to heal the hearts that bleed.

What does it matter? None can say
How far the waves of influence roll,
How hard they dash against the soul;
The good or ill they bear away
To bring again some future day.

SUNBEAMS.

Remorse is the mother of good resolutions.

He that is embarked with the devil must sail with him.

A man's conscience never hurts him for deceiving those who ill treat him.

When a man's temper gets the best of him it reveals the worst of him.

The man who gives the shortest answer in this world will want the longest harp in the next.

Amy—What do you think of your new shoes, Mamie? Mamie—Oh, they'll do at a pinch.

It is curious what a tremendous mission some men and a good many women think they have.

Jack—Why am I like a Latin noun, Nell? Nellie—Don't know—why? Jack—Because you can't decline me.

A Cure for Deafness.

THERE have been many remarkable cures of deafness made by the use of Haggard's Yellow Oil, the great household remedy for pain, inflammation and soreness. Yellow Oil cures rheumatism, sore throat and croup, and is useful internally and externally for all pains and injuries.

White Gentleman—Uncle Joe, you never work on Sunday, do you? Uncle Joe—No, sah. You doan ketch sich a 'ligious nigger as me wukkin' on Sunday. I so keerful 'bout dat I doan wuk on no day dat tech Sunday. I doan wuk on Sat'day nor Monday, nuther; an' sometimes I keep Sunday de whole week. You got to rustle roun' if you want ter find a nigger wid no religion den I's got.

The discovery just made in Medina, N. Y., that in 12 wells out of 20 examined the water is unfit to drink, while in four others it was pronounced suspiciously by the expert who tested it, ought to excite interest everywhere. There can be little doubt that danger lies in many village wells—and in many country wells also. But wherever there is a public supply of pure water, the general use of it ought to be strictly enforced. Close up those wells!

A QUEER PLACE TO HIDE MONEY.

MONTREAL, Jan. 24.—Walter Sheridan, the American bank thief, who was arrested here and died in jail here, has been turned over to the Inspector of Anatomy to be given to some medical school. Under the plate of his false teeth were found two $5 bills, where they had been kept for safe keeping.

An Irishman named Cassy died recently in Albuquerque very wealthy. By his will he left to Gen. J. A. Williamson, of Iowa, nearly half a million dollars for a favor to Cassy long ago forgotten.

GUARANTEED.

The only medicines sold by druggists under a positive guarantee from their manufacturers, that they will do just what is claimed for them—that is, benefit or cure in all cases of diseases for which they are recommended, or the money paid for them will be promptly refunded—are Dr. Pierce's world-famed specifics, manufactured by World's Dispensary Medical Association, of Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery cures all diseases arising from a torpid or deranged liver, or from impure blood, as Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, Pimples, Blotches, Eruptions, Salt-rheum, Tetter, Erysipelas, and Scrofulous Sores and Swellings. Consumption, or Lung-scrofula, is also cured by this wonderful remedy, if taken in time.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the world-famed remedy for all those chronic weaknesses and distressing derangements so common to American women. It is a most potent, invigorating, restorative tonic, or strength giver, imparting tone and vigor to the whole system. As a soothing nervine it is unequaled. THE SUN
FOR
1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN's opinions about men and things, and some people don't; everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose, it is not THE SUN's fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is a duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out with THE SUN.

S1. HOSPITAL REMEDIES S1.
WILL GIVE YOU
HEALTH!
A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE

The four greatest medical institutions of the civilized world are those of Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These cities have immense Hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of people from all parts of the world are daily attending under the Professors in charge. The most eminent physicians of this world break and practise here, and the institutions are everywhere of learning. At great expense, personal the prescriptions of these institutions, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quaint patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle. The most unique part for a reliable column of chemistry, medicine is now filled with perfect satisfaction. The Hospital Remedies make no exception of this. The specific for CATARRH cures that and nothing else; so with the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLE; RHEUMATISM is cured by No. 3, while troubles of DIGESTION, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their own cure. To these is a dual specific for FEVER and AGUE, one for FEMALE WEAKNESS—a GENERAL TONIC and BLOOD-MAKER that makes a bl ood and SILVER FURS AND FULMERS, and an invaluable remedy for NERVOUS DEBILITY.

The Favorite

medicine for Throat and Lung Diseases has long been, and still is, Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. It cures Croup, Whooping Cough, Bronchitis, and Asthma; soothes irritation of the Throat and Pharynx; strengthens the Vocal Organs; allays soreness of the Lungs; prevents Consumption, and, in its advanced stages of that disease, relieves Coughing and induces Sleep. There is no other preparation for diseases of the throat and lungs to be compared with this remedy.

"My wife had a distressing cough with pains in the side and breast. We used various medicines, but none did us any good until I got a bottle of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, which has cured her. A neighbor, Mrs. Gleason, had the measles, and the cough was relieved by the use of Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have no hesitation in recommending this to every one afflicted."—Robert Horton, Foreman Headlight, Morrilton, Ark.

"I have been afflicted with asthma for forty years. Last spring I was taken with a violent cough, which threatened to terminate my days. Every one pronounced me in consumption. I determined to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Its effects were magical. I was immediately relieved and continued to improve until entirely recovered."—Joel Bullard, Guilford, Conn.

"Six months ago I had a severe hemorrhage of the lungs, brought on by a incessant cough which deprived me of sleep and rest. I tried various remedies, but obtained no relief until I began to take Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. Few bottles of this medicine cured me."—Mrs. E. Coburn, 19 Second st., Lowell, Mass.

"For children afflicted with colds, coughs, sore throat, or croup, I do not know of any remedy which will give more speedy relief than Ayer's Cherry Pectoral. I have found it, also, invaluable in cases of Whooping Cough."—Ann Lovejoy, 1337 Washington st., Boston, Mass.

A WANDERER'S LAMENT.

Drearily moans the night wind
Dismally falls the rain,
Wearily creaks the shutter
Against the window-pane.
Alone with saddened memories
I sit in the dim firelight
And I would give the world to press
My baby's cheek to-night.

Her eyes they are the bluest,
They'd change the very sky;
Her cheeks are wind-blown roses
Through which the June winds sigh;
Her hair is tangled sunbeams,
Her mouth too sweet by half.
And I would give the world to night
To hear my baby's laugh.

Last night I dreamed I saw her;
Her face was radiant, fair,
But when I tried to clasp her
She vanished into air;
Her laugh was just as merry
As from her lips it fell,
But, alas, her golden ringlets
Were crowned with asphodel.

I know 'twas but a vision,
A freak of fancy's flight,
My babe in peace reposes
By its mother's side to-night,
But drearily moans the night-wind,
Dismally falls the rain,
I would give the world to kiss
My baby's cheek again.

THE MILL MYSTERY.

CHAPTER XX.

THE OLD MILL.

Whither wilt thou lead me? speak; I'll go no further.

HAMLET.

I DID not sleep well that night, but this did not prevent me from beginning work early in the morning. The sermon I had been interrupted in the afternoon before, had to be completed that day; and I was hard at work upon it when there came a knock at my study-door. I arose with anything but alacrity and opened it. Dwight Pollard stood before me.

It was a surprise that called up a flush to my cheeks; but daylight was shining upon this enterview, and I knew none of those sensations which had unnerved me the night before. I was simply on my guard, and saw him seat himself in my own chair, without any other feeling than that of curiosity as to the nature of his errand. He likewise was extremely self possessed, and looked at me calmly for some instants before speaking.

"Last night," he began, "you refused a request which my mother made of you."

I bowed.

"It was a mistake," he continued. "The paper which my father gave you cannot be one which he in his right senses would wish seen by the public. You should have trusted my mother, who knew my father much better than you did."

"It was not a matter of trust," I protest. "A document had been given me by a dying man, with an injunction to put it into certain hands. I had no choice but to fulfil his wishes in this regard. Your mother herself would have despised me if I had yielded to her importunities and left it behind me."

"My mother," he commenced.

"Your mother is your mother," I put in. "Let us have respect for her widowhood, and leave her out of this conversation."

He looked at me closely, and I understood his glance

"I cannot return you your father's will," I declared firmly.

He held my glance with his.

"I cannot return it to you," I repeated.

He arose and approached me courteously. "You are doing what you consider to be your duty," said he. "In other words than my mother used, I simply add, on our heads must be the consequences." And his grave look, at once half-sad and half-determined, impressed me for the first time with a certain sort of sympathy for this unhappy family. "And this leads me to the purpose of my call," he proceeded, deferentially. "I am here at my mother's wish, and I bring you her apologies. Though you have done and are doing wrong by your persistence in carrying out my poor father's wishes to the detriment of his memory, my mother regrets that she spoke to you in the manner she did, and hopes that you will not allow it to stand in the way of your conducting the funeral services."

"Mr. Pollard," I replied, "your father was my friend, and no other man could I delegate the privilege of uttering prayers over his remains. But I would not be frank to you nor true to myself if I did not add that it will take more than an apology from your mother to convince me that she wished me well, or is, indeed, anything but the enemy her looks proclaimed her to be last night."

"I am sorry——" he began, but meeting my eye, stopped. "You possess a moral courage which I envy you," he declared. And waiving the subject of his mother, he proceeded to inform me concerning the funeral and the arrangements which had been made.

I listened calmly. In the presence of this man I felt strong. Though he knew the secret of my weakness, and possibly despised me for it, he also knew what indeed he had just acknowledged, that in some respects I was on a par with him.

The arrangements were soon made, and he took his leave without any further allusion to personal matter. But I noticed that at the door he stopped and cast a look of inquiry around the room. It disconcerted me somewhat; and while I found it difficult to express to myself the nature of the apprehension which it caused, I inwardly resolved to rid myself as soon as possible of the responsibility of holding Mr. Pollard's will. If Mr. Nicholls did not return by the day of the funeral, I would go to Boston myself and find him.

No occurrences worth mentioning followed this interview with Dwight Pollard. I conducted the services as I had promised, but found nothing to relate concerning them, save the fact that Mrs Pollard was not present. She had been very much prostrated by her husband's death, and was not able to leave her room, or so it was said. I mistrusted the truth of this, however, but mis-acknowledge. I was glad to be relieved of a presence not only so obnoxious to myself, but so out of tune with the occasion. I could ignore Guy, subtle and secret as he was, but this woman could not be ignored. Where she was, there brooded something dark, mysterious, and threatening; and whither she smiled or frowned, the influence of her spirit was felt by a vague oppression at once impossible to analyse or escape from.

From the cemetery I went immediately to my house. This day was a dreary one, and I felt chilled. The gray of the sky was in my spirit, and everything seemed unreal and dark and strange. I was in a mood, I suppose, and, unlike myself on other singular occasions, did not feel that drawing towards the one dear heart which hitherto had afforded me solace and support. I had not got used to my new self as yet, and till I did, the simile of her I loved was more of a reproach to me than consolation.

I was stopped at the gate by Mrs. Banks. She is my next door neighbor, and in the absence of my landlady, who had gone to visit some friends, took charge of any message which might be left for me while I was out. She looked flurried and mysterious.

"You have had a visitor," she announced.

As she paused and looked as if she expected to be questioned, I naturally asked who it was.

"She said she was your sister," she declared. "A tall woman with a thick veil over her face. She went right up to your study, but I think she must have got tired of waiting, for she went away again a few moments ago."

My sister! I had no sister. I looked at Mrs. Banks in amazement.

"Describe her more particularly," said I.

"That I cannot do," she returned. "Her veil hid her features too completely for me to see them. I could not even tell her age, but I should say, from the way she walked, that she was older than you."

A chill, which did not come entirely from the east wind then blowing, ran sharply through my veins.

"I thank you," said I, somewhat incoherently, and ran hastily up-stairs. I had a presentiment as to the identity of this woman.

At the door of my study I paused and looked hurriedly around. No signs of any disturbance met my eye. Crossover to my desk, I surveyed the papers which I had left scattered somewhat loosely over it. They had been moved. I knew it by the position of the blotter, which I had left under a certain sheet of paper, and which now lay on top. Hot and cold at once, I went immediately to the spot where I had concealed Mr. Pollard's will. It was in my desk, but underneath a drawer instead of in it, and by this simple precaution, perhaps, I had saved it from destruction; for I found it lying in its place undisturbed, though the hand which had crept so near its hiding place was, as I felt certain no other than that of Mrs. Pollard, searching for this very document.

It gave me a shuddering sense of disquiet to think that the veiled figure of this portentous woman had glided over my floors, reflected itself in my mirrors, and hung, dark and mysterious in its veiling drapery, over my desk and the papers which I had handled myself so lately.

I was stuck, too, by the immovable determination to compass her own ends at any and every risk, which was manifested by this incident; and, wondering more and more as to what had been the nature of the offence for which Mr. Pollard sought to make reparation in his will, I only waited for a moment of leisure in order to make another effort at enlightenment by a second study of the prayer book which my dying friend had placed so earnestly in my hands.

It came, as I supposed, about eight o'clock that evening. The special duties of the day were done, and I knew of nothing else that demanded my attention. I therefore took the book from my pocket, where I had fortunately kept it, and was at the point of opening its pages when there came a ring at the door-bell below.

As I have said before, my landlady was away, I consequently went to the door myself, where I was met by an unexpected visitor in the shape of the idiot boy, Colwell. Somewhat disconcerted at the sight of a face so repugnant to me, I was still more thrown off my balance when I heard his errand. He had been sent, he said, by a man who had been thrown from his wagon on the north road, and was now lying in a dying condition inside the old mill, before he was picked up. Would I come and see him? He had but an hour or so to live, and wished very much for a clergyman's consolation.

It was a call anything but agreeable to me. I was tired; I was interested in the attempt which I was about to make to solve a mystery that was not altogether disconnected with my own personal welfare, and—let me acknowledge it, since events have proved I had reason to fear this spot—I did not like the old mill. But I was far from conceiving what a wretched experience lay before me, nor did the fact that the unwelcome request came through the medium of an imbecile arouse any suspicion in my mind as to the truth of the message he brought. For, foolish as he is in some regards, his reliability as an errand boy is universally known, while his partiality for roaming, as well as for excitements of all kinds, fully accounted for the fact of his being upon the scene of accident.

I had, then, nothing but my own disinclinations to contend with, and these strong as they were, could not, at that time and in the mood which my late experience had induced, long stand in the way of a duty so apparent.

I consequently testified my willingness to go to the mill, and in a few minutes later set out for that spot with a mind comparatively free from disagreeable forebodings. But as we approached the mill, and I caught a glimpse of its frowning walls glooming so darkly from out the cluster of trees that environed them, I own that a sensation akin to that which had been awakened in me by Mrs. Pollard's threats, and the portentous darkness of her sombre mansion, once again swept with its chilling effect over my nerves.

Shocked, disgusted with myself at the recurrence of a weakness for which I had so little sympathy, I crushed down the feelings I experienced, and advanced at once to the door. A tall and slim figure met me, clothed in some dark enveloping garment, and carrying a lantern.

"The injured man is within," said he. Something in the voice made me look up. His face was entirely in shadow.

"Who are you?" I asked.

He did not reply.

"Let us go in," he said.

A week before I would have refused to do this without knowing more of my man. But the shame from which I had suffered for the last two days had made me so distrustful of myself that I was ready to impute to cowardice even the most ordinary instinct of self-preservation.

I accordingly followed the man though with each step that I took I felt my apprehensions increase. To pierce in this manner a depth of sombre darkness with only the dim outline of an unknown man moving silently before me, was any thing but encouraging in itself. Then the way was too long, and the spot we sought too far from the door. A really injured man would not be carried beyond the first room, I thought, and we had already taken steps enough to be half-way through the building. At last I felt that even cowardice was excusable under these circumstances, and, putting out my hand, I touched the man before me on the shoulder.

"When are we going?" I demanded.

He continued to move on without reply.

"I shall follow you no longer if you do not speak," I cried again. "This midnight journey through an old building ready to fall into ruins seems to me not only unpleasant but hazardous."

Still no answer.

"I warned you," I said, and stopped, but the next moment I gave an almost frantic bound forward. A form come up against me from behind, and I found that a man was following as closely upon my steps as I had been following those of the person who stalked before me.

The thrill of this discovery will never be forgotten by me. For a moment I could not speak; and when I did, the sound of my voice only added to my terrors.

"You have me in a trap," said I; "who are you; and what are your intentions with me?"

"We have you where we can reason with you," exclaimed the voice of him who pressed against my back; and at the sound of those gentlemanly tones with their underlying note of sarcasm, I understood that my hour had come. It was the voice and intonation of Guy Pollard.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE VAT.

Duc.—Talk you of killing?
Oth.—Ay, I do.
Duc.—Then, heaven
Have mercy on me!—OTHELLO.

"I quivered with shame, for I felt my heart sink. But there was no pause in the smooth, sarcastic tones behind me. "When a man persists in judging of his duty contrary to the dictates of reason, he must expect restraint from those who understand his position better than he does himself."

"Then," quoth I, with suddenly acquired strength, "I am to understand that the respectable of family Pollard finds itself willing to resort to the means and methods of highwaymen in order to compass its ends and bend me my duty."

"You are," a determined voice returned.

At that word, uttered as it was in a tone inexorable as fate, my last ray of hope went out. The voice was that of a woman.

I however, made a strong effort for the preservation of my dignity and person.

"And will Samuel Pollard's eldest and best beloved son, the kind hearted and honest Dwight, lend himself to a scheme of common fraud and violence? I asked.

The reply came in his brother's most sarcastic tones. "Dwight has left us," he declared. "We have no need of honesty or kind-heartedness here. What we want for this business is an immovable determination."

Startled, I looked up. The lantern which had hitherto swung from the hand of my guide stood on the floor. By its light three things were visible. First, that we stood at the head of a staircase descending into a depth of darkness which the eye could not pierce; secondly, that in all the area about me but two persons stood; and third, that of these two persons one of them was masked and clad in a long black garment such as is worn at masquerade balls under the name of a domino. Struck with an icy chill, I looked down again. Why had I allowed myself to be caught in such a trap. Why had I not followed Mr. Nicholls immediately to Boston when I heard that he was no longer in town? Or, better still, why had I not manufactured for myself a safe-guard in the form of a letter to that gentleman informing him of the important document which I held, and the danger in which it possibly stood from the family into whose toils I had now fallen? I could have cursed myself for my dereliction.

"David Barrows," came in imperative tones from the masked figure, "will you tell us where this will is?"

"No," I returned.

"Is it not on your person?" the inquisitorial voice pursued.

"It is not," I answered, firmly, thankful that I spoke the truth in this.

"It is in your rooms, then; in your desk, perhaps?

I remained silent.

"Is it in your rooms!" the indomitable woman proceeded.

"You who have been there should know," I replied, feeling my courage rise, as I considered that they could not assail my honor, while my life without my secret would benefit them so little that it might be said to stand in no danger.

"I do not understand you," the icy voice declared; while Guy, stepping forward, planted his hand firmly on my shoulder and said:

"Wherever it is, it shall be delivered to our keeping to-night. We are in no mood for dallying. Either you will give us your solemn promise to obtain this will, and hand it over to us without delay and without scandal, or the free light of heaven is shut out from you forever. You shall never leave this mill."

"But," I faltered, striving in vain to throw off the incubus of horror which his words invoked, "what good would my death do you? Could it put Mr. Pollard's will in your hands?"

"Yes," was the brief and decided reply, "if it is anywhere in your rooms."

It was a word that struck home. The will was in my rooms, and I already saw it, in my imagination, torn from its hiding place by the unscrupulous hand that held me.

Mastering my emotion with what spirit I could, I looked quickly about me. Was there no means of escape? I saw none. In the remote and solitary place which they had chosen for this desperate attempt, a cry would be but waste of breath, even if we were in that part of the mill which looked toward road. But we were not; on the contrary, I could see by the aid of the faint glimmer which the lantern sent forth, that the room in which we had halted was as far as possible from the front of the building, for its windows were obscured by the brush wood which only grew against the back of the mill. To call out, then, would be folly, while to seek by any force or strategy to break away from the two relentless beings that controlled me could only end in failure, unless darkness would come to my aid and hide my road of escape. But darkness could only come by the extinguishing of the lantern, and that it was impossible for me to effect; for I was not strong enough to struggle in its direction with Guy Pollard, nor could I reach it by any stretch of foot or hand. The light must burn and I must stay there, unless—the thought came suddenly—I could take advantage of the flight of steps at the head of which I stood, and by a sudden leap, gain the cellar, where I would stand a good chance of losing myself amid intricacies as little known to them as to myself. But to do this I must be free to move, and there was no shaking myself loose from the iron clutch that held me.

"You see you are in our power," hissed the voice of the woman from between the motionless lips of her black mask.

"I see I am," I acknowledged, "but I also see that you are in that of God." And I looked severely towards her, only to drop my eyes again with an irrepressible shudder.

For, lay it to my weakness or to the baleful influence which emanated from the whole ghostly place, there was something absolutely appalling in this dropped and masked figure with its gleaming eyes and cold, thin voice.

"Shall we have what we want before your death or after?" proceeded Guy Pollard, with a calm but cold ignoring of my words that was more threatening than my rudeness.

I did not answer at first, and his grip upon me tightened; but next moment, from what motive I cannot say, it somewhat relaxed; and, startled with the hope of freedom, I exclaimed with a vehemence for which my former speech must have little prepared them:

"You shall not have it at all. I cannot break my word with your father, and I will not stay here to be threatened and killed;" and making a sudden movement, I slipped from his grasp, and plunged down the steps into the darkness below.

But, scarcely had my feet touched the cellar floor, before I heard the warning cry shrill out from above:

"Take care! There is an open vat before you. If you fall into that, we shall be free of your interference without lifting a hand."

An open vat! I had heard of vats in the old mill's cellar. Instinctively recollecting, I stood still, not knowing whether to advance or retreat. At the same moment I heard the sound of steps descending the stairs.

"So you think this a better place for decision than the floor above?" exclaimed Guy Pollard, drawing up by my side. "Well, I am not sure but you are right," he added; and I saw by the light of the lantern which his companion now brought down the stairs, the cool glimmer of a smile cross his thin lips and shine for a moment from his implacable eyes. Not knowing what he meant, I glanced anxiously about, and shrank with dismay as I discerned the black hole of the vat he had mentioned, yawning within three feet of my side. Was it a dream, my presence in this fearful spot! I looked at the long stretch of arches before me glooming away into the darkness beyond us, and felt the chill of a nameless horror settle upon my spirit.

Was it because I knew those circles of blackness held many another such pit of doom as that into which I had so nearly stumbled? Or was it that the grisly aspect of the scene woke within me that slumbering demon of the imagination which is the bane of natures like mine:

Whatever it was, I felt the full force of my position, and scarcely cared whither my voice trembled or not as I replied:

"You surely have me in your hands; but that does not mean that it is I who must make a decision. If I understand the situation, it is for you to say whether you will be murderers or not."

"Then you do not intend to put us in possession of my father's will?"

"No," I murmured, and bowed my head for the blow I expected from him.

But he dealt me no blow. Instead of that he eyed me with a look which grew more and more sinister as I met his glance with one which I meant should convey my indomitable resolution. At last he spoke again:

"I think you will reconsider your determination," he said, with a meaning that I did not even then fathom, and exchanging a quick glance with the silent figure at his right, he leaned towards me and—what happened? For a moment I could not tell, but soon, only then, I recognised by my stunned and bleeding body, by the closeness of the air I suddenly breathed, and by the circle of darkness that shut about me, and the still more distinct circle of light that glimmered above, that I had been pushed into the pit whose yawning mouth had but a few short moments before awakened in me such dismay.

Aghast, almost mad with horror of a fate so much more terrible than any I had anticipated, I strove to utter a cry; but my tongue refused its office, and nothing but an inarticulate murmur rose from my lips. It was not piercing enough to clear the edge of the vat, and my soul sank with despair as I heard its fruitless gurgle and realized by the sound of departing steps, and the faint and fainter glimmer of the circle of light which at my first glance had shone quite brightly above my hideous prison house that my persecutors had done their worst and were now leaving me alone in my trap to perish.

God! what an instant it was? To speak, to shriek, to call, say plead for aid, was but the natural outcome of the overwhelming anguish I felt, but the sound of steps had died out into an ar-

ORANGE INCORPORATION BILL.

THE Orange bill was brought up for consideration in the Dominion Parliament at Ottawa early on Monday afternoon last, and, to the surprise of everybody, passed its second reading on a vote, but without a debate. The measure is in the hands of Mr. N. C. Wallace, who introduced it ten days ago. In moving that it be advanced to its second stage Mr. Wallace made a brief, pithy, and exceedingly moderate speech. He pointed out that the Orange Order is a loyal association, having religious and benevolent objects in view. That there is anything very secret about it he denies. Its constitution and by-laws are open to the world; its reports are published; its ritual, though in a measure private, is of such a character that the order is quite ready to submit it for the inspection of any member of the House. The only real secrets are the signs and passwords, and other societies incorporated by Parliament, the Independent Order of Foresters, for instance, have such secrets as those. In fact the Independent Order of Foresters incorporated last year is just as secret an association as the Orange Order. Mr Wallace spoke rather strongly of Mr. Blake's opposition to the order when it was last before the House, which was, of course, based upon the theory that the organization is political, and stated that the politics of the Orangemen were loyalty to the Queen and country. If annexation or independence should become issues then the Orange Order would speak with no uncertain sound. It was fully expected that some discussion would follow Mr. Wallace's speech, but no one ventured to rise. Mr. Laurier, however, called for a division. When the vote was taken it transpired that there were 83 for the bill and 69 against it. Thus the measure squeezed through by a majority of 16. Sixty members were absent when the vote was taken. The following are the Yeas and Nays:—

YEAS—Messrs. Archibald (Sir Adams), Armstrong, Baird, Barnard, Barron, Bell, Bowell, Boyle, Brown, Bryson, Burdett, Cargill, Carling, Carpenter, Charlton, Cochrane, Cockburn, Corby, Daly, Davies, Davin, Davis, Dawson, Denison, Dewdney, Dickinson, Earle, Ferguson (Leeds and Grenville), Ferguson (Renfrew), Ferguson (Welland), Foster, Gordon, Guillet, Haggart, Heson, Hickey, Hudspeth, Jamieson, Jones (Digby), Macdonald (Sir John), MacDonald (Huron), McCarthy, McCulla, McDonald (Victoria) McDougald (Pictou), McKay, McKeen, McNeill, Madill, Mara, Marshall, Masson, Mills (Annapolis), Moberuff, O'Brien Platt, Porter, Prior, Putnam, Robertson, Rourke, Ross, Rowand, Rykert, Semple, Shanley, Skinner, Small, Smith (Ont.), Sproule, Sutherland, Taylor, Temple, Tisdale, Tupper, Tyrwhitt, Waldie, Wallace, Ward, Watson, Welch, White (Cardwell), White (Renfrew), Wilson (Lennox), Wood (Westmoreland) 85

The Orange bill now goes to the Private Bills or to the Banking Committee.

PARNELL THANKS BARNUM

LONDON, Feb. 4.—Mr. Parnell met Mr. Barnum in the law courts yesterday, where both were called by legal business. They had a pleasant chat, during which Mr. Barnum congratulated the Irish champion upon his victory over the Times, and Mr. Parnell thanked the old showman for his efforts in behalf of Irish industries.

Mr. Barnum to day won the suit brought against him by Mr. Trotman to recover $1,250 which Trotman asserted he had advanced to Barnum's agent Davis.

A CURE FOR DIPTHERIA.—The Scientific American says:—"the following remedy for diptheria is said to be the best known, at least it is worth trying, for physicians seem powerless to cope with the disease successfully. At the first indication of diptheria in the throat of a child make the room close; then take a tin cup and pour into it a quantity of tar and turpentine, equal parts. Then hold the cup over a fire so as to fill the room with fumes. The little patient on inhaling the fumes, will cough up and spit out all the membranous matter and the diptheria will pass off. The fumes of the tar and turpentine loosen the matter in the throat, and thus afford the relief that has baffled the skill of physicians.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

HIRAM W. HUNGER, the slate king, died at his home in Granville, N. Y., on Saturday last, aged 83 years.

WM. O'BRIEN, M. P., spoke at Manchester, Eng., on Tuesday of last week, and said Mr. Gladstone's reconciliation of England and Ireland was one of the greatest triumphs of the century.

JOE HESS, alias John Brooks, an old time Toronto pugilist, has forsaken the prize-ring for the temperance cause, and last Sunday addressed a vast assemblage at the Pavilion in the above city. Joe has come to his senses at last by giving up "fisticuffing."

Archbishop Cleary has issued a pastoral on the Separate school question, which, like all his public utterances, is vigorous to a degree. His Grace, it will be seen, threatens to withold the sacraments from Roman Catholics who turn their money to the Public schools.

FROM exchanges of various political leanings in Prince Edward Island, it is learned that after a thoroughly lying and disreputable canvass the wicked candidates have all been beaten and the best men selected by the constituencies. The country continues to be safe.

THE anti high license argument that drunkenness and drunken crime increase with the decrease of the opportunities for obtaining drink, suggests chiefly either that the person who advances it is not of a mental calibre to command respect for his views, or that he is not honest.

IT is not said that Nelly Bly (Elizabeth Cochrane), the New York World reporter who has just made a circuit of the globe in less than 73 days is a Canadian, and was born in Frontenac county in 1866. The discovery must have been made by a man, as no woman would have given away Nellie's age.

SOME philosopher has introduced into the Wyoming Legislature a bill providing that every unmarried man in the Territory who is more than thirty five years of age shall pay an annual tax of $2 50. The principle is sound, but the details are shaky. If a man is to be fined for being a bachelor, make the fine heavy, and the race of old bachelors will disappear.

HER LIFE FOR THE LEPER.

Sister Rose Gertrude the self sacrificing young English woman who became a nun in order to devote her life to the lepers on the Island of Molokai, has been resting quietly since her arrival on the Bothnia. She prefers to be called by her real name, Miss Amy Fowler. She is a small, slender creature who looks to be twenty two but says she was just twenty years of age when the first thought of consecrating herself to the lepers took possession of her.

"What first drew attention to them?" was asked of her;

"A sermon I heard one Sunday morning in Bath, England. The preacher spoke of Father Damien. It was only an incidental allusion, but then and there I resolved to devote my life to the same cause. A voice spoke in my heart calling me to do this work for Almighty God, and it has never been silent since. At first there seemed but little hope of my being able to fulfil my wish. My father would not hear of such a thing then, I was so young that the Government would never have accepted me. There are very rigid rules regulating the admission of strangers to the lepers' colony. It is at an end of the island of Molokia which is naturally isolated by tall cliffs. There are now between 800 and 1,000 lepers there, and fifty years ago there was not one in the Sandwich Islands!"

Miss Fowler then described how the Government has deemed it expedient to sanction matrimonial alliances among them, so that now lepers marry, are given in marriage, and rear their tainted off spring. It is to instruct the children that here Franciscan nuns from Syracuse N. Y., have been admitted to the island but Miss Fowler is the only woman not a native who has been accepted for hospital service. Miss Fowler is taking out a microscope and other apparatus, with which to wage war against the deadly leprous microbe.

"It has been already discovered all by a Norwegian physician," exclaimed the little lady, by blue eyes flashing with scientific fervour, and the English roses in her cheeks flushing from pink to red. "but I shall be able to study its growth and development under different conditions, and I shall send home photographs of the various stages which I am able to make with my camera some English friends have provided me with."

The absence of anything nun-like in Miss Fowler's appearance led to a question, in answer to which she explained, that when she decided to devote her life to this work she found that the Hawaiian Government would not accept any woman's services on the island unless she is a religieuse. Therefore, only a month ago, she took the vows of the third order of Dominican Sisters. These of this degree do not assume a habit and a new name, and are not known as "Sisters," but a special dispensation of the Superior General of the Dominicans allows these privileges to Miss Amy Fowler.

Miss Fowler dwelt with pleasure upon the widespread sympathy extended to her mission by English people: The Queen sent a present of fifty guineas, and contributions of money and useful articles books, medical appliances, toys and even sweetmeats were donated. She hopes very earnestly that some one will give her a piano to take to that far island. The lepers are extravagantly fond of music, and this young apostle wants to drive away some of the horrors of their mournful existence with melody.

"No, I do not feel afraid of infection. There is no especial danger unless one has an open wound or a scratch. In the poison will enter without contact. It is atmospheric."

Miss Fowler will write a book about her experience on the island, and proposes to illustrate it with the photographs she hopes to obtain.

ICE SUPPLY AT ORANGEVILLE.—There seems to be a great demand for ice at present, and parties from Toronto are at Orangeville negotiating for the shipment of large quantities from Dufferin Lake, where, strange to say, notwithstanding the mildness of the winter, it seems to be of a superior quality.—Guelph Herald.

Concert takes place on Friday evening, February 21st. Admission—Ladies and Gentlemen, 25c.; Children, 15c.

A CORRECTION.—Our esteemed contemporary, the Advertiser, makes an unpleasant error last week when it said: "Granny' Irwin, one of the oldest residents of Orangeville, died in destitute circumstances on Monday. The remains were interred at the corporation's expense yesterday." We have been requested to state that the old lady was not in want; and that the corporation or anybody else was not asked to bury her. Mr. Jno. Irwin, her son, paid for everything out of his own pocket.

DEATH OF AN OLD PIONEER.—On Monday death removed an old resident of Caledon, in the person of Alexander Mitchell, Esq., at the ripe old age of ninety years. For the last two years deceased had been in indifferent health, and death was not at all unexpected. Mr. Mitchell was a staunch Presbyterian in religion, a Reformer in politics, and a man liked by all. The funeral took place from his late residence Caledon, to the Forest Lawn Cemetery on Wednesday, and was very largely attended.

HALTON'S VICTORY.—The suit of Halton county against the G. T. R., which has excited much attention was decided in favor of Halton, at the last Chancery sittings in Toronto, by Judge Robertson. PUBLIC SCHOOL BOARD.—All the members, except Mr. Dodds, were present at Monday night's meeting of the public school board. Chairman Savage presided. The minutes of the last meeting were read and confirmed, and a number of small accounts were ordered to be paid. The teachers sent in a communication, requesting that their salaries be paid monthly, instead of quarterly. Messrs. Ewings, Wilcox, and Hughes voted in favor of granting the prayer of the petitioners; while Messrs. Savage, Kelly, Leighton and Perdue went straight against it. Payday will remain unchanged. Mr. R. J. Jackson, jr., of Cardwell, was awarded the contract for supplying the school with sixty-five cords of wood at $3.50 per cord. The trustees decided in favor of building a new wood-shed.

AN EDITOR'S DUTIES DEFINED.—A fellow editor makes the following apology to his readers:—"We apologize for mistakes made in all former issues, and say they were inexcusable, as all an editor has to do is to hunt news, and clean the rollers, and set type, and sweep the floor, and pen short items, and fold papers, and write wrappers, and make the paste, and mail the papers, and talk to visitors, and distribute type, and carry water, and saw wood, and read the proofs, and correct the mistakes, and hunt the cheers to write editorials, and dodge the bills, and dun delinquents, and take cussing from the whole force, and tell our subscribers that we need money. We say that we've no business to make mistakes while attending to these little matters and getting our living on hopper-tail soup. Favored with imagination and wearing old shoes and no collar and a patch on our pants, and obliged to turn a smiling countenance to the man who tells us our paper isn't worth $1 any how, and that he could make a better one with his eyes shut."

AN UPHILL FIGHT.—For the past half century Tom Scott has been a well known character in Elora, Fergus and neighbourhood. A few months since he had the misfortune to break his leg, and was just able to hobble around again when he got grippe, followed by acute inflammation, put an end to his terrible sufferings on Sabbath evening. Deceased leaves a wife and grown up family to mourn the loss of a man who, with all his faults, had a noble heart, and whose generous acts will be remembered for years to come. The subject of this notice was a hard working man, had many ups and downs in life, but amid them all maintained his equilibrium. He cared little for the riches of this world, and unlike other men of less philosophic turn of mind, did not let mammon occupy his best thoughts. No, he was satisfied with his daily bread. Like the birds of the air he had neither barn nor storehouse, fully believing that the Creator would provide for the creatures. No employment was too menial as long as he could turn an honest penny and during his 54 years of probation never knew the want of a crust. Peace to poor Tom's ashes.—Fergus News-Record.

TOM. KANE HANGED!

HE MEETS DEATH WITHOUT A TREMOR.

Thos. Kane, the man who was convicted for the murder of his sister-in-law at Toronto, on Nov. 16, last, was hanged at that city yesterday morning. The scaffold was the one on which Wm. H. Harvey, the Guelph murderer, was executed some time ago. Kane retained his iron nerve until the last, and walked to the gallows without flinching. The hangman was an Englishman and quite an expert at the business. The murderer's neck was not broken, and he slowly strangled to death, but did not appear to be in much pain, although it was thirteen minutes before life was pronounced extinct.

Ever since Kane was sentenced to die, he professed to be a Protestant, but the day before the execution he asked for a priest. When that fact was known, two Catholic clergymen went to the jail and remained with the condemned man until his soul was launched into eternity.

The recent wind-storms have done a great deal of damage around here.

Miss Henderson has survived an attack of the universal epidemic, la grippe.

Postmaster Woods, of Blount, has moved the blacksmith shop down near his residence for a stable.

Mr. Thos. Allen, who has been severely ill with the influenza, has almost recovered.

Half of the roof of the barn of Mr. Chas. Clark was blown off the other day. It will take $25 to repair the injury.

Bill Nelson, the champion dance getter up of this section, takes the cake for his especial hobby. Last Thursday night the boys and girls were seen going to Bill's in large numbers to "tip the light fantastic toe," which they did in excellent shape until late the next morning. We did not hear whether the Hockley "jays" ran Mrs. Hicks' buggies down to the Nottawa this time or not.

(Too late for last week.)

CREDIT FORKS.

"McGINTY'S GRIP."

The Forks of the Credit is sorely tried,
By the malady with which McGinty died;
From experience I know it is very flip,
This thing they call the "McGinty grip."

It catches you first with a pain in the head,
And makes you wish you were long since dead;
The back of your neck feels as if it had a clip,
When you first get acquainted with "McGinty's grip."

But when it taps you on the back,
"McGinty's grip" takes up the slack,
And weighs you down like a ton of brick,
Does this monster they call "McGinty's grip."

You can't sit up, you can't lay down,
You'll wish that you were out of town;
But I'll tell you, my friend, 'tis a very short trip,
You'll take when you get "McGinty's grip."

Some talk of going to New Orleans—
It's well for those that have the means;
But that kind of pleasure I'll let slip,
As long as I have "McGinty's grip."

The doctors are thicker than flies in summer,
Calling alike on the rich and the bummer;
With a pain in his side and a pain in his hip
From this woeful disease "McGinty grip."

When your eyes stick out above your nose,
And you think you are going to turn up your toes;
Just call for some brandy and take a sip,
In the best thing you can do for "McGinty's grip."

'Tw'll make you nervous, 'tw'll make you sweat,
And everything will go wrong you bet;
Your bones will crack like a whalebone whip,
When you have properly got "McGinty's grip."

Be careful, my friends, when travelling 'round,
You may not last long above the ground;
For if you should happen to make a slip,
Your elected sure for "McGinty's grip."

'Tis the very worst thing that ever struck town,

A great discovery of zinc ore has been made near Field, in Manitoba. A Canadian Pacific Railway tunnel is driven right through the lode, which is simply one solid body of ore. The ore has always been mistaken for red granite, but it turns out to be a very rich body of zinc. It is at least 100 feet wide. The ore assays 65 per cent. zinc, 10 per cent. iron, $250 in gold, and $150 in silver to the ton.

The McGinty gag has at last reached the Rockies—at least Medicine Hat. The Times of that place says:—"McGinty" jokes are taking a practical form in this town. This morning a mob of big boys paraded the streets carrying a blackboard mounted on a pole on which was the seeming advertisement:—"Sale, W. Cousins, Auctioneer." Of course, the question "Where?" was asked, and the answer "In McGinty's backyard," given several times before the boys were tired."

There are fully 6,000 people in North Dakota who are in need of assistance. The afflicted people are mostly Americans and Scandinavians. Three times that number of horses and cattle are on the verge of starvation or will be before spring unless food is promptly supplied. The stock, while it may survive, will be absolutely unfit for farm work when the season opens. This condition of affairs prevails in seven counties in the northern part of the State especially in what is known as the Devil's Lake territory.

A General Tie-Up
of all the means of public conveyance in a large city, even for a few hours, during a strike of the employes, means a general paralyzing of trade and industry for the time being, and is attended with an enormous aggregate loss to the community. How much more serious to the individual is the general tie-up of his system, known as constipation, and due to the strike of the most important organs for more prudent treatment and better care. If too long neglected, a torpid or sluggish liver will produce serious forms of kidney and liver diseases, malarial trouble and chronic dyspepsia. Dr Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets are a preventive and cure of these disorders. They are prompt, sure and effective, pleasant to take, and positively harmless.

THE DUKE IN JAIL.

His Reason for coming to France—Interview with his Father.

PARIS, Feb. 13.—The Duc d'Orléans was brought before the tribunal of the Seine on Saturday when he was charged with a flagrant violation of the decree banishing from France all pretenders to the throne. He said he came to France to perform his military duties, and stated that his case be adjourned in order to allow him to instruct his counsel. The court thereupon adjourned the case until Wednesday.

WHAT THE DUKE'S FATHER SAYS.

In an interview with the father of the Duke, the following took place:—

"Do you think there will ever be a revolution in France?"

"Well, that depends upon circumstances. I, of course, hope there will be, and I sincerely believe that if the question of establishing a monarchy were put to a vote the people would be heartily in favor of it."

"What could you hope to make by Gen. Boulanger's success should he become president."

"We hope to convince the people by his government together with the present, that a republican form of government is not the best for France. They are already dissatisfied with the government they have at present, and when they shall have tried Boulanger and found it wanting they will demand a return to a dignified monarchy."

"La Grippe" or Lightning Cold.
MR EDITOR,—"La Grippe," or Russian influenza, as it is termed, is in reality an epidemic catarrh, and is called by some physicians "lightning catarrh," from the rapidity with which it sweeps over the country. Allow us to draw the attention of your readers to the fact that Nasal Balm, which has been a thorough cure for all cases of ordinary cold in head and catarrh, will give prompt relief in even the most severe cases of "la grippe" or "lightning influenza," and will effectually clear the nasal passages, allay irritation and relieve the dull, oppressive headache accompanying the disease. No family should be without a bottle of Nasal Balm in the house, as cold in the head and catarrh are peculiarly liable to attack people at this season of the year, and Nasal Balm is the only prompt and speedy cure for these troubles ever offered the public. Easy to use and agreeable. If you cannot get it at your dealers it will be sent post free on receipt of price (50 cents and $1 per bottle) by addressing

Samuel Vandusen Abbott, aged 17, who lived with his grandfather, R. Vandusen, a wealthy metal dealer, on West 36th street, New York, shot himself on Saturday afternoon in his room and died on Saturday night. The boy was born in that city. His parents, who were wealthy, brought him to Liverpool while he was still an infant. His father is said to be an admiral in the English navy. The boy left his parents last October and came to stop with his grandfather. The coroner thinks the boy was deranged, and believes he was of a romantic turn of mind. Beyond this the motive of the suicide could not be learned. The family refuses to give any information. Interesting developments are expected.

Woman's Work.
There is no end to the tasks which daily confront the good housewife. To be a successful housekeeper, the first requisite is good health. How can a woman contend against the trials and worries of housekeeping if she be suffering from those distressing irregularities, ailments and weaknesses peculiar to her sex? Dr Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a specific for them diseases. It is all you claim it to be." ALLAN A. CLARKE, Amherst, N. S.

BIRMINGHAM ALA., Feb. 8.—Bob Hawes, who murdered his wife and two little daughters last December, and was convicted and sentenced to be hanged Feb 28th, has made a confession. To rid himself of his family, that he might marry a beautiful and talented young girl of Meridian, Hawes beat his wife's brains out, killed his two daughters, and tied heavy pieces of iron to their bodies, and threw them into the lake. Four days after the discovery of the first body Hawes passed through this city on his wedding trip. He was arrested and locked up. Hawes in his confession implicates an old friend, John Wylie, an engineer on the Alabama Great Southern Railway, and he has been arrested. Others are also implicated, but the authorities refuse to divulge their names. Frank Bryant was convicted as an accomplice to the murders, at the last term of court and sentenced to life imprisonment. He is now serving her term.

CATARRH.
CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER
A NEW HOME TREATMENT.
Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment; both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by E. S. Dixon & Sons, 303 West King St., Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Sufferers from Catarrhal troubles should carefully read the above.

REPORTS OF GOVERNMENT CHEMISTS

As to Purity and Wholesomeness of the Royal Baking Powder.

"I have tested a package of Royal Baking Powder, which I purchased in the open market, and find it composed of pure and wholesome ingredients. It is a cream of tartar powder of a high degree of merit, and does not contain either alum or phosphates, or other injurious substances. E. G. LOVE, Ph.D."

"It is a scientific fact that the Royal Baking Powder is absolutely pure. (H. A. MOTT, Ph.D.")

"I have examined a package of Royal Baking Powder, purchased by myself in the market. I find it entirely free from alum, lime, alum, or any other injurious substance. HENRY MORTON, Ph.D., President of Stevens Institute of Technology."

"I have analyzed a package of Royal Baking Powder. The materials of which it is composed are pure and wholesome. S. DANA HAYES, State Assayer, Mass."

The Royal Baking Powder received the highest award over all competitors at the Vienna World's Exposition, 1873; at the Centennial, Philadelphia, 1876; at the American Institute, New York, and at State Fairs throughout the country.

No other article of human food has ever received such high, emphatic, and universal endorsement from eminent chemists, physicians, scientists, and Boards of Health all over the world.

NOTE—The above DIAGRAM illustrates the comparative worth of various Baking Powders, as shown by Chemical Analysis and experiments made by Prof. Schedler. A pound can of each powder was taken, the total leavening power or volume in each can calculated, the result being as indicated. This practical test for worth by Prof. Schedler only proves what every observant consumer of the Royal Baking Powder knows by practical experience, that, while it costs a few cents per pound more than ordinary kinds, it is far more economical, and, besides, affords the advantage of better work. A single trial of the Royal Baking Powder will convince any fair minded person of these facts.

* While the diagram shows some of the alum powders to be of a higher degree of strength than other powders ranked below them, it is not to be taken as indicating that they have any value. All alum powders, no matter how high their strength, are to be avoided as dangerous.

THE SUN

FOR

1890.

Some people agree with THE SUN's opinions about men and things, and some people don't; everybody likes to get hold of the newspaper which is never dull and never afraid to speak its mind.

Democrats know that for twenty years THE SUN has fought in the front line for Democratic principles, never wavering or weakening in its loyalty to the true interests of the party it serves with fearless intelligence and disinterested vigor. At times opinions have differed as to the best means of accomplishing the common purpose, it is not THE SUN's fault if it has seen further into the millstone.

Eighteen hundred and and ninety is the year that will probably determine the result of the Presidential election of 1892, and perhaps the fortunes of the Democracy for the rest of the century. Victory in 1892 is duty, and the beginning of 1890 is the best time to start out with THE SUN.

fal stillness, and the glimmering circle upon which my staring eyes were fixed had faded into a darkness as utter and complete, that had the earth been piled above my head, I could not have been more wholly hidden from the light.

I had fallen on my knees, and desperate as I was, had made no attempt to rise. Not that I thought of prayer, unless my whole dazed and horrified being was a prayer. The consolation which I had offered to others did not seem to meet this case. Here was no death in the presence of friends and under the free light of heaven. This was a horror. The hand of God which could reach every other mortal, whatever their danger or doom, seemed to stop short at this gate of hell. I could not even imagine my soul reaping thence I was buried: body and soul, I was buried and yet I was alive and knew that I must remain alive for days if not for weeks.

Poetry.

IN SEARCH OF REST.

Even as one in city pent
Dazed with the stir and din of town,
Drums on the pane in discontent,
And sees the dreary rain come down.
Yet through the dimmed and dripping glass
Behold, in fancy, visions pass.

Of spring that breaks with all her leaves,
Of birds that build in thatch and eaves,
Of woodlands where the throstle calls,
Of girls that gather cowslip balls.

Of kine that low and lambs that cry,
Of trains that jolt and rumble by,
Of brooks that sing by brambly ways,
Of sunburned folk that stand and gaze.

Of all the dreams with which men chest
The stony sermons of the street;
So, in its hour, the artist brain,
Weary of human ills and woes,
Weary of passion and of pain,
And vaguely craving for repose.

Deserts awhile the stage of strife
To draw the even ordered life,
The easeful days, the dreamless nights,
The homely round of plain delights,
The calm the unambitioned mind
Which all men seek and few men find.

WING TEE WEE.

Wing Tee Wee,
Was a sweet Chinee,
And she lived in the town of Tac,
And her eyes were blue,
And her curling cue
Hung dangling down her back;
And she fell in love with gay Win Sil,
When he wrote his love on a laundry bill.

And O, Tin Told
Was a pirate bold,
And he sailed in a Chinese junk;
And he loved, ah, me;
Sweet Wing Tee Wee,
But his valiant heart had sunk.
So he downed his blues in fickle fizz
And vowed the maid would yet be his.

So bold Tin Told
Showed all his gold
To the maid in the town of Tac,
And sweet Wing Wee
Eloped to sea
And nevermore came back.
For in far Chinee the maids are fair,
And the maids are false, as everywhere.

SEPARATION.

The word is spoken, the tie is broken,
Our bleeding hearts are torn in twain;
When sore hearts sever and part forever,
No earthly balm can soothe their pain.

Our lives are blasted, our brief joy lasted
A fleeting hour and then was dead;
The thoughts that grieve us can never leave us—
'Twas only joy and love that fled.

On no tomorrow shall brooding sorrow
Pluck out his deep corroding darts;
Where Love lay laughing, now Grief sits quaffing
Teh bitter tears that fill our hearts.

Unlike the majority of things in this queer world, fogs are always mist until they are gone.

It was the Presbyterian pastor's little daughter (in these creed-revising times) who asked, "Papa, do you believe in a personal Santa Claus?"

A beautiful young lady became so sadly disfigured with pimples and blotches that it was feared she would die of grief. A friend recommended Ayer's Sarsaparilla, which she took, and was completely cured. She is now one of the fairest of the fair.

Bagely—"Oh, yes; I had the borrowing habit a year ago, but I'm cured now." Bailey—"Who cured you?" Bagley—"My friends."

"No use," exclaimed an impecunious debtor to an importunate creditor, "you can't get blood out of a turnip." "I know that," responded the creditor, "but unless I get that money I'll have gore from a beat."

Two stories always go together—one that the queen is dangerously ill and the other that Wales is dangerously debauched. These stories have been before the public so long that one almost suspects the English of American politics.

Unsightly pimples, blotches, tan and all itching humors of the skin are removed by using Dr Low's Sulphur Soap

Lots of private and trust funds to loan at 5½ and 6 per cent, on liberal terms, by R. E Hamilton, Grand Valley.

"Gentlemen," said an eminent Australian lawyer recently, "the case for the Crown is a mere skeleton—a mere skeleton, gentlemen; for, as I shall presently show, it had neither flesh, blood nor bones in it." On another occasion he solemnly declared that a "verbal agreement was not worth the paper it was written on."

A Cure for Deafness.

THERE have been many remarkable cures of deafness made by the use of Hagyard's Yellow Oil, the great household remedy for pain, inflammation and soreness. Yellow Oil cures rheumatism, sore throat and croup, and is useful internally and externally for all pains and injuries.

"There is a saloon directly opposite."

"That is a drawback in one respect, but think what a convenience it is to know where you can always find a policeman near."

A French officer of high rank in the last war had his leg shot away by a common ball.

While he was being carved for his valet wept bitterly:

"Don't cry, my good fellow," said the officer with grim humor; "you've had all the luck today, for you'll never hereafter have to shine more than one boot."

He Tinkled to Persecution.

"FOR years I suffered from dyspepsia in its worst forms, and after trying all means in my power to no purpose, friends persuaded me to try Burdock Blood Bitters, which I did, and after using five bottles I was completely cured." Mrs. McNeil, Leith, Ont.

"You've met Wanamaker?"

"Oh, yes."

"What kind of a man is he?"

"Well, he is a man of the postage stamp kind—rather sticky, and a little of him goes a great way."

"Ah, poor old Menasse ran a long race!"

"Yes, and after all it was a dead heat."

"Why, what do you mean?"

"He was cremated—with whiskey."

Mrs. Brown—"I'm afraid Johnnie won't eat this worm candy if I tell him what it is, and if I give it to him without telling he'll be apt to be suspicious."

Brown—"Hide it away in the corner of the pantry."

Dr Low's Worm Syrup has removed tape worms from 1 to 20 feet long. It also destroys all other kinds of worms.

"They say Mrs. Smith took on fearfully at Smith's death."

"Yes, poor thing! she could scarcely be reconciled to his loss."

"Did she get much insurance?"

"No; it was a total loss. All his policies had lapsed."

The Coming Comet.

It is foretold by a grateful patron that the next comet will appear in the form of a huge bottle, having "Golden Medical Discovery" inscribed upon it in bold characters. Whether this conceit and heigh compliment will be verified, remains to be seen, but Dr. Pierce will continue to send forth that wonderful vegetable compound, and potent eradicator of disease. It has no equal in medicinal and health-giving properties, for imparting vigor and tone to the liver and kidneys, in purifying the blood, and through it cleansing and renewing the whole system. For scrofulous humors, and consumption, or lung scrofula, in its early stages, it is a positive specific. Druggists.

A few weeks since, we began to give her Ayer's Sarsaparilla. Her health has greatly improved."—Mrs. Harriet H. Battles, South Chelmsford, Mass.

"About a year ago I began using Ayer's Sarsaparilla as a remedy for debility and neuralgia resulting from malarial exposure in the army. I was in a very bad condition, but six bottles of the Sarsaparilla, with occasional doses of Ayer's Pills, have greatly improved my health. I am now able to work, and feel that I cannot say too much for your excellent remedies."—F. A. Pinkham, South Molunous, Me.

"My daughter, sixteen years old, is using Ayer's Sarsaparilla with good effect."—Rev. S. J. Graham, United Brethren Church, Buckhannon, W. Va.

"I suffered from

Mrs. Ann H. Farnsworth, a lady 79 years old, So. Woodstock, Vt., writes: "After several weeks' suffering from nervous prostration, I procured a bottle of Ayer's Sarsaparilla, and before I had taken half of it my usual health returned."

HOSPITAL REMEDIES

WELL KNOWN

HEALTH!

A NEW DEPARTURE IN MEDICINE.

The four greatest medical centres of the world are London, Paris, Berlin and Vienna. These often have immense hospitals teeming with suffering humanity. Crowds of students throng the wards attending under the Professors in charge. The most renowned physicians of the world teach and practise here, and the institutions are storehouses of medical knowledge and experience. With a view of making this experience available to the public the Hospital Remedy Co. at great expense secured the prescriptions of these hospitals, prepared the specifics, and although it would cost from $25 to $100 to secure the attention of their distinguished originators, yet in this way their prepared specifics are offered at the price of the quack patent medicines that flood the market and absurdly claim to cure every ill from a single bottle. The most obstinate ills for a reliable class of chronic complaints in vogue filled with perfect satisfaction. The Hospital Remedies make no unreasonable claims. The specific for CATARRH proves that and nothing else; so with the specific for BRONCHITIS, CONSUMPTION and LUNG TROUBLES; RHEUMATISM is cured by No. 3, while troubles of DIGESTION, STOMACH, LIVER and KIDNEYS have their sure cure. ## Beauty

Is desired and admired by all. Among the things which may best be done to enhance personal beauty is the daily use of Ayer's Hair Vigor. No matter what the color of the hair, this preparation gives it a lustre and pliancy that adds greatly to its charm. Should the hair be thin, harsh, dry, or turning gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will restore the color, bring out a new growth, and render the old soft and shiny. For keeping the scalp clean, cool, and healthy, there is no better preparation in the market.

"I am free to confess that a trial of Ayer's Hair Vigor has convinced me that it is a genuine article. Its use has not only caused the hair of my wife and daughter to be but it has given my rather stunted mustache a respectable length and appearance."—R. Britton, Oakland, Ohio.

Abundant and Glossy,

"My hair was coming out (without any assistance from my wife, either). I tried Ayer's Hair Vigor, using only one bottle, and I now have as fine a head of hair as any one could wish for."—R. T. Schmitton, Dickson, Tenn.

"I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor in my family for a number of years, and regard it as the best hair preparation I know of. It keeps the scalp clean, the hair soft and lively, and preserves the original color. My wife has used it for a long time with most satisfactory results."—Benjamin M. Johnson, M. D., Thomas Hill, Mo.

"My hair was becoming harsh and dry, but after using half a bottle of Ayer's Hair Vigor it grew black and glossy. I cannot express the joy and gratitude I feel."—Mabel C. Hardy, Delavan, Ill.

THE SONG OF THE SEA WAVES.

Borne on the breast of the breezes
Fresh from the foam and the spray,
Safe from the southwind that seizes
Fairest of forms for its prey,
Smelling of brine from the billows,
Salt with the salt of the waves,
Rocked on tempestuous pillows,
Nursed in the seas that are graves.

Come from the Northern Atlantic,
Come from the winds of the west,
Ghastly with spectres gigantic,
Phantoms of fear and unrest,
Tempest-tossed backward and forward,
Songs from the waves of the sea,
Blown by the wild winds to shoreward,
Blown by the nightwinds to me.

Visions of summer eternal
South in the isles of the blest,
Climes where the winter is vernal,
Lands where the storms are at rest,
Shores without sadness or sorrow,
Streams without shadow or stain,
Days without dream of tomorrow,
Nights without knowledge of pain.

Pass through the gloom 'mid the sighing
Sound of the wind in the pines;
Die with the light that is dying
Far on the mountain inclines;
Flicker and fade and disperse
Visions and fancies and gleams
Ever returning, and ever
Dying again into dreams.

Dim grow the mountains; the daylight
Dies like a dream that is o'er;
Grim, through the mist, in the grey light,
Flash the white waves on the shore.
Come to me, gazing to seaward,
Snatches of songs of the sea,
Borne by the kind winds to me-ward
Borne by the night-winds to me.

Comes the remembrance of stories,
Fragments of tunes and of rhymes,
Songs of past days, and the glories,
Told of in tales of old times;
Faces and forms that discover
Love for a love that is dead,
Memories pallid that hover
Over the years that have fled.

Visions of ships flying seaward
Spread with white sails to the night,
Storm-clouds to windward and leeward,
Foul winds that follow in flight,
Skies that turn bright in the morning,
Suns that rise red without form,
Flames that burst forth as a warning,
Telling of tempest and storm.

Pale faces, placid in dying,
Wet with the brine as with tears,
Depths wherein lost hearts are lying
Silent through limitless years.
Come in the mist and the twilight
Over the rocks and the shore,
Fade as the forms in the sky might
Fade when the sunset is o'er;

Phantoms and forms from far regions
Found on the wandering waves,
Drifting to shoreward in legions,
Swept from their shadowless graves,
Tempest-tossed backward and forward,
Come from the wide waste of sea,
Blown by the wild winds to shoreward,
Borne by the night-winds to me.

CHAPTER XXI.—Continued.

THE VAT.

Des.—Talk you of killing?
Oth.—Ay, I do.
Des.—Then, heaven
Have mercy on me!—OTHELLO.

I do not suppose that I remained in this frightful condition of absolute hopelessness for more than five minutes, but it seemed to me an eternity. If a drowning man can review his life in an instant what was there not left for me to think and suffer in the lapse of those five horrible minutes? I was young when the unscrupulous hand of this daring murderer pushed me into this pit; I was old when with a thrill or joy such as passes over the body but once in a life time, I heard a voice issue from the darkness, saying severely: "David Barrows are you prepared for a decision now?" and realized that like the light that now sprang into full brilliance above my head, hope had come again into my life, and that I had to speak but a dozen words to have sunshine and liberty restored me.

The rush of emotion which this startling change brought was almost too much for my reason. Looking up into the sardonic face, I could now discern peering over the edge of the vat, I asked with a frantic impulse that left me no time for thought, if an immediate restoration to freedom would follow my compliance with his wishes and when he answered: "Yes," I beheld such a vision of sunshiny fields and a happy, love lighted home, that my voice almost choked as I responded, that I did not think his father would have wished me to sacrifice my life or force a son of his into the crime of murder, for the sake of any reparation which money could offer. And as I saw the face above me grow impatient, I told in desperate haste where I had concealed the will of and how it could be obtained without arousing the suspicion of my neighbors.

He seemed satisfied and hastily withdrew his face; but soon returned and asked for the key of my house. I had it in my pocket and hurriedly pitched it up to him, when he again disappeared.

"When shall I be released?" I anxiously called out after him.

But no answer came back, and presently the light began to fade as I stood and the sound of steps grew fainter and fainter till silence and darkness again settled upon my prison house.

But this time I had hope to brighten me, and shutting my eyes, I waited patiently. But at last, as no change came and the silence and darkness remained unbroken, I became violently alarmed and cried to myself: "Am I the victim of their treachery? Have they obtained what they want and now am I to be left here to perish?"

The thought made my hair stand on end and had I not been a God-fearing man I should certainly have raised my voice in curses upon my credulity and lack of courage. But before my passion could reach its height, hope shone again in the shape of returning light. Some one had entered the cellar and drawn near the edge of the vat; but though I strained my gaze upward, no face met my view, and presently I heard a voice which was not that of Guy Pollard utter in tones of surprise and apprehension:

"Where is the clergyman? Guy said I should find him here in good condition?"

The masked figure, who was doubtless the one addressed, must have answered with a gesture towards the hole in which I lay, for I heard him give vent to a horrified exclamation and then say in accents of regret and shame: "Was it necessary?" and afterwards: "Are you sure he is not injured?"

The answer, which I did not hear, seemed to satisfy him, for he said no more, and soon, too soon, walked away again, carrying the light and leaving me as I now knew, with that ominous black figure for my watch and guardian,—a horror that lent a double darkness to the situation which was only relieved now by the thought that Dwight Pollard's humanity was to be relied on, and that he would never wantonly leave me there to perish after the will had been discovered and destroyed.

It was well that I had this confidence for the time I now had to wait was long that I lived it through and at last had the joy of hearing footsteps and the voice of Guy saying in a dry and satisfied tone. "It is all right," after which the face of Dwight looked over the edge of the vat and he gave me the help which was needed to lift me out.

I was a free man again. I had slipped from the gates of hell, and the world with all its joys and duties lay before me bright and beautiful as love and hope could make it. Yet, whether it was the gloom of the cellar in which we still lingered, or the baleful influence that emanated from the three persons in whose presence I once more stood, I felt a strange sinking at my heart and found myself looking back at the pit from which I had just escaped, with a sensation of remorse, as if in its horrid depths I had left or lost something which must create a void within me forever.

My meditations in this regard were interrupted by the voice of Guy.

"David Barrows," said he, "we hold the paper which was given you by my father."

I bowed with with a slight intimation of impatience.

"We have looked at it and it is as he said, his will. But it is not such a one as we feared, and to-morrow, or as soon as we can restore the seal, we shall return it to you for such disposition as your judgment suggests."

I stared at him in an amazement that made me forget my shame.

"You will it back?" I reposted.

"To morrow," he laconically replied.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE CYPHER.

Ah, my false heart, what hast thou done?

This is a story of fact; it is also a story of mental struggle. I shall not, therefore, be considered too diffuse if I say that this unlooked-for ending to my unhappy adventure threw me into a turmoil of feeling, from which I had no rest until the next day came. That they should promise to restore the will, to obtain which they had resorted to measures almost criminal in their severity awoke in me the greatest astonishment. What could it mean? I waited to see the will before replying.

It came, as Guy Pollard had promised at noon of the following day. It was in a new envelope, and was sealed just as it had been before it had left my possession. Had I not known into whose unscrupulous hands it had fallen I should have doubted if it had ever been opened. As it was, I was not only confident that it had been read from end to end, but fearful that it had been tampered with, and perhaps altered. To get it out of my hands, if possible, my mind also, I carried it at once to Mr. Nicholls, who I had ascertained that morning, had returned to town the day before.

He received me with affability, but looked a little surprised when he learned my errand.

"I was just going to call on the family," said he; "I drew up Mr. Pollard's will myself, and——"

"You drew up Mr. Pollard's will?" I hastily interrupted. "You know, then its contents, and can tell me——"

"Pardon me," he as hastily put in, "the family have the first right to a knowledge of what Mr. Pollard has done for them."

I felt myself at a loss. To explain my rights and the great desire which I experienced to ascertain whether the intent of the paper he now held coincided with that which he had submitted to Mr. Pollard for his signature, necessitated a full relation of facts which I was not yet certain ought to be made public. For if the will had not been meddled with, and Mr. Pollard's wishes stood in no danger of being slighted or ignored, what else but a most unhappy scandal could accrue from the revelation which I should be forced to make? Then, my own part in the miserable affair. If not productive of actual evil, it was still something to blush for, and I had not yet reached that stage of repentance or humility which made it easy to show the world a weakness for which I had no pity nor sympathy myself. Yet to guard the interests with which I had been intrusted, it was absolutely necessary that the question which so much disturbed me should be answered. For, if any change had been made in this important paper by which the disposition of Mr. Pollard's property should be turned aside from the channel in which he had ordered it, I felt that no consideration for the public welfare or my own good fame should hinder me from challenging its validity.

My embarrassment evidently showed itself, for the acute lawyer, after a momentary scrutiny of my face, remarked:

"You say Mr. Pollard gave you this will to hand to me. Do you know the cause of this rather extraordinary proceeding, or have you any suspicion why, in the event of his desiring me to have in charge a paper which ought to be safe enough in his own house, he chose his pastor for his messenger instead of one of his own sons?"

"Mr Nicholls," I returned, with inward satisfaction for the opportunity thus given me for reply, "the secrets which are confided to a clergyman are as sacred as those which are entrusted to a lawyer. I could not tell you my suspicions if I had any; I can only state the facts. One thing, however, I will add. That owing to circumstances which I cannot explain, but greatly regret, this paper has been out of my hands for a short time, and in speaking as I did, I wished merely to state that it would be a satisfaction to me to know that no harm has befallen it, and that this is the very will in spirit and detail which you drew up and saw signed by Mr. Pollard."

"Oh," exclaimed the lawyer, "if that is all, I can soon satisfy you." And tearing open the envelope, he ran his eye over the document and quietly nodded.

"It is the same," he said. "There has been no meddling here."

And feeling myself greatly relieved, I rose without further conservation and hastily took my leave.

But when I came to think of it all in my own room, I found my equanimity was not fully restored. A doubt of some kind remained, and though, in consideration of the manifold duties that pressed upon me, I relentlessly put it aside, I could not help its lingering in my mind, darkening my pleasures, and throwing a cloud over my work and the operations of my mind. The sight which I now and then caught of the Pollards did not tend to allay my anxieties. There was satisfaction in their countenances, and in that of Guy, at least, a certain triumphant disdain which could only be partly explained by the victory which he has won over me through my fears. I awaited the proving of the will with anxiety. If there were no seeming reparation made in it, I should certainly doubt its being the expression of Mr. Pollard's wishes.

What was my surprise, then, when the will being proved, I obtained permission to read it and found that it only contained mention of reparation, but that this reparation was to be made to Margaret his wife.

"For sums loaned by her to me and lost, I desire to make reparation by an added bequest——" so it read; and I found myself nonplussed and thrown entirely in all my calculations and conjectures. The anxiety he had shown lest the will should fall into this very woman's hands, did not tally with this expression of justice and generosity, nor did the large sums which he had left to his three children show any of that distrust which his countenance had betrayed towards the one who was present with him at the time of his death. Could it be that he had given me the wrong paper or was he, Mrs. Pollard had intimated, not responsible for his actions and language at that time. I began to think the latter conjecture might be true, and was only hindered in the enjoyment of my old tranquility by the remembrance of the fearful ordeal I had been subjected to in the mill, and the consideration which it brought of the fears and suspicions which must have existed to make the perpetration of such an outrage possible.

But time, which dulls all things, soon began to effect my memory of that hideous nightmare, and with it my anxiety lest in my unfaithfulness to my trust, I had committed a wrong upon some unknown innocent. Life with its duties and love with its speedy prospect of marriage gradually pushed all unpleasant thoughts from my mind, and I was beginning to enjoy the full zest of my happy and honorable position again, when my security was again, and this time forever, destroyed by a certain revelation that was accidentally made to me.

The story of it was this. I had taken by mistake with me to a funeral the prayer-book with which Mr. Pollard had presented me. I was listening to the anthem which was being sung, and being in a nervous frame of mind, was restlessly fingering the leaves of the book which I held in my hand, when my eye, running over the page that happened to open before me, caught sight of some of the marks with which the text was plentifully besprewed. Mechanically I noticed the words under which they stood, and mechanically I began reading them, when, to my great astonishment and subsequent dismay, I perceived they made sense, in short had a connection which, when carried on from page to page of the book, revealed sentences which promised to extend themselves into with home, and found The Epistle. Eph. iii. 1. the babe lying in a manger. Am where they had seen it, they made known abroad the saying which was had spoken concerning this child. And all they that heard it wondered at those things which were told them by the shepherds. But Mary kept all these things, and pondered them in her heart. And the shepherds returned, glorifying and praising God for all the things that they had heard and seen, as it was told unto them. And when eight days were accomplished for circumcising of the child, his name was called Jesus, which was so named of the angel before he was conceived in the womb.

a complete communication. This is the page I happened upon, with its lines and dots. Note the result which accures from reading the marked words alone.

It was but one of many, and you can imagine how difficult I found it to continue with the service and put the subject from my mind till the funeral was over and I could return to solitude and my third and final examination into the meaning of this mystetious gift.

You can imagine my wonder when by following out the plan I have indicated the subjoined sentences appeared, which, if somewhat incoherent at times—as could only be expected from the limited means at his command—certainly conveyed a decided meaning, especially after receiving the punctuation and capital letters, which, after long study and some after knowledge of affairs, I have ventured upon giving them:

"My sin is ever before me.

"Correct, lest though bring me to nothing.

"Do those things which are requisite and necessary for a pure and humble one, Grace by name, begotten by son, he born of first wife and not obedient to the law abroad, a prisoner.

"Revelation made known in few words whereby when ye read ye may understand the mystery which was made known unto the sons, fellowship of Grace.

"Go and search diligently for the young child.

"The higher powers resist and are a terror to good works.

"Do that which is good and thou shalt have praise, minister of God.

"Wherefore ye must needs be for wrath, for they are attending continually upon this thing.

"Render therefore to all their dues; tribute to whom tribute; honor to whom honor.

"Two possessed of devils, exceeding of the household, hope Grace may evermore be cast away.

"They murmur against the good man of the house, and do not agree to mercifully defend against perils in the city an honest and good heart.

"My will leave(s) heritage to Grace.

"The devil is against me.

"Behold a woman grievously vexed with lost sheep of the house.

"Then came she saying: "It is not meete to take the children's bread and cast it to the dogs. Be unto us an offering named as becometh saints. For this ye know, that no unclean persons hath any inheritance because of disobedience and fellowship with works of darkness. For it is a shame to speak of those which are done to them in secret."

"Beelzebub, the chief of devils, and sons cast out man; taketh from him all wherein he trusteth and divideth the spoils against me.

"To purge conscience, the new testament means redemption of the trans, gressions under first testament.

"Said a devil: "Father, ye do dishonor me. Say ye know him not, thy son, and suffer that a notable prisoner his wife and child, were not called by thy name." "I will," said I. But I deny all here. My soul is sorrowful unto death; I bear false witness against them.

"The hand that betrayeth me is with me.

"I appoint yet to sift as wheat.

"This must be accomplished, for the things concerning me have an end.

"Words sent unto me out of prison, and 'Daughter weep(s). Beseech thee graciously to fetch home to thee my child in tribulation. For lo, the ungodly bend their bow and make ready their arrows within the quiver, that they may privily shoot at them which are true at heart. Show thy marvellous loving-kindness unto an undefiled soul forsaken on every side of mother and friendly neighbour. Make haste to deliver and save. I am clean forgotten, as a dead man out of mind. I am become as a broken vessel.'

"Whilst I held my tongue, my bones consumed away daily.

"I will inform thee and teach thee in the way wherein thou shalt go.

"Blessed are folk chosen to inheritance; the children of them that dwell under the king.

"Poor Grac(e) come over the sea (sea), unaware that I were sick.

"Deliver my darling from the lions, so will I give thee thanks.

"O let not them that are mine enemies triumph that hate me.

"They imagine deceitful words against them that are quiet in the land.

"Child is in thy land.

"Look after daughter among honorable women. House in City of the East Wind.

"Child I have looked upon not.

"I promised with my lips and spake with my mouth, but God turned his mercy upon me, and upon health hath sent forth his voice, yea, and that a mighty voice.

"I sink, and the deep waters drown me.

"Mine adversaries hath broken my heart.

"Let the things that should have been for them be for the poor prisoner's posterity.

"Break down the carved work and search out my will.

"Walk to table under southwest borders of room, take the wood that hath in it operations of the law, and cleave.

"For my days are gone like a shadow and I am withered as grass."

"La Grippe" or Lightning Catarrh.

MR EDITOR,—"La Grippe," or Russian influenza, as it is termed, is in reality an epidemic catarrh, and is called by some physicians "lightning catarrh," from the rapidity with which it sweeps over the country. Allow me to draw the attention of your readers to the fact that Nasal Balm, as well as been a thorough cure for all cases of the ordinary cold in head and catarrh, will give prompt relief in even the most severe cases of "la grippe" or "Russian influenza," as it will effectually clear the nasal passages, allay irritation and relieve the dull, oppressive headache accompanying the disease. No family should be without a bottle of Nasal Balm in the house, as cold in the head and catarrh are peculiarly liable to attack people at this season of the year, and Nasal Balm is the only prompt and speedy cure for these troubles ever offered the public. Easy to use and agreeable. If you cannot get it at your dealers it will be sent post free on receipt of price (50 cents and $1 per bottle) by addressing

CATARRH,

CATARRHAL DEAFNESS—HAY FEVER
A NEW HOME TREATMENT.

Sufferers are not generally aware that these diseases are contagious, or that they are due to the presence of living parasites in the lining membrane of the nose and eustachian tubes. Microscopic research, however, has proved this to be a fact, and the result of this discovery is that a simple remedy has been formulated whereby catarrh, catarrhal deafness and hay fever are permanently cured in from one to three simple applications made at home by the patient once in two weeks. N.B.—This treatment is not a snuff or an ointment, both have been discarded by reputable physicians as injurious. A pamphlet explaining this new treatment is sent on receipt of ten cents by A. H. Dixon & Son, 305 West King Street, Toronto, Canada.—Toronto Globe.

Sufferers from Catarrhal trouble should carefully read the above.

BUSINESS AT LOOSE ENDS.

(London Free Press.)

ANOTHER servant of the Mowat Government has become a defaulter in a large sum, furnishing a fresh illustration of the loose methods of government at Toronto. A few years ago an official was found out in a clear defalcation of about $12,000 cash, which the Government was anxious to hide from public view and the facts which were only extorted at the hands of a virulent Opposition. This time it is the Crown Lands Department which has been levied upon. A bushranger named Dulmage, it seems, collected in one year nearly $100,000 of timber revenues belonging to the Government, without proper authority, and skipped across the lines with a large amount of the plunder. The regulations required that this money should be paid by the holders of timber licenses direct to a bank to be named by the Government. Yet no bank was designated, and this man was allowed to go on collecting from every one, without giving bonds or security of any kind for the proper return of the money. When called to account for this dereliction of duty, resulting in a serious loss to the treasury, the excuse is made through Mr. Mowat's organ, the Globe, that the then Commissioner, Mr. Pardee, was ill a part of the time! This attempt to make a scapegoat of their dead colleague is most despicable and small souled. It was not until last year that the defaulter ran off with his "boodle," and for at least two years prior to that time the late Mr. Pardee was practically incapacitated, and the duty of exercising supervision over his department fell upon his colleagues, while to the same subordinates who are now there was committed the routine work and the responsibility of seeing that regulations such as that covering the case of Dulmage were obeyed. The Government cannot be permitted to escape just censure on the plea of Mr. Pardee's illness. Responsibility lies too clearly at the door of the general administration under which such a loose system crept in. Because a minister falls ill, is the whole routine of his department to be supposed to lapse into chaos? Usually the work goes on according to the system laid down. Affairs are not dependant upon the health of the presiding officer from day to day. But in this case there was no system, or it was so defective and at loose ends that one of the remotest of the officials did as he chose, collected money in large sums at his own pleasure, and in direct violation of the standing rules of the department. No wonder that he should take advantage of the position by taking himself off with a big booty. That might have been looked for. But it was the duty of those nearer to the source of authority to see to it that before Dulmage took upon himself the function of timber dues collector, he gave sufficient bonds to cover any probable amount coming into his hands. It is bad enough to bear the loss of the money and to know that business is carried on so loosely in the Local Government, but for the Mowats and Hardys to try to shift the blame upon the reputation of the late Commissioner is disgraceful to them.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

MR. David Creighton, M.P.P., has been re-nominated by the Conservatives of North Grey.

MR. Peter McLaren, the millionaire lumber man of Perth, has been appointed to the Senate, in place of the late Senator Turner.

THE practicability of substituting electricity for hanging as a means of execution has been affirmed by the Commission appointed in the State of New York to test the different apparatuses that have been prepared with this end in view. The Commission expresses the opinion that each one of the apparatuses can be used successfully, and that death by electricity can be accomplished inside of 4s. There is, in the Commissioner's opinion, no cause for imagining that there will ever be any failure of result.

UNTIL the recent throwing open to settlement of the great Sioux Reservation in South Dakota that vast track of 24,000,000 acres was inhabited exclusively by 25,000 Indians, there thus being more than 1,000 acres for every man, woman and child in the tribe. The reservation has long been of little account as a hunting ground, and the chief effect of keeping it closed has been to give the wilder Indians an opportunity to shut themselves away from civilization influences. For the land relinquished the Indians will receive $10,500,000, and every Indian family that chooses to accept it will be entitled to a farm of 320 acres, and tools with which to work it.

LOCAL LEGISLATION.

A New Waterworks Committee Appointed—The New Board of Health—Ketchum Introduces Here By-Laws—Accounts Passed and Other Business Done by the Fathers.

Mayor Walsh, Reeve Lindsay, Deputy reeve Endacott and Ald. Bailey, Gillespie, Green, King, Pinkney and Ketchum were on time at Monday night's session of the town parliament. Ald. Youmans and Cobean dropped in a little later in the evening.

Acting-Clerk McMaster read the minutes of the last meeting, which were slightly amended and adopted.

ACCOUNTS

Iron J. M. Bennett $46; E. McCarston, $6.50; Jas. Morrison, $9.74; M. Perkins, $3.00; Jas. Morrison, $4.50; Roswell & Hutchison, $4.60; W. Fremlin, 50cts.; were passed, and ordered to be paid. Bills from R. Allen, $1.75; C. W. Sydie, .75; W. Fremlin, $7.87; T. Stevenson, $1.47, were referred to their respective committees for consideration.

The secretary and the bandmaster of the Citizens' band asked for a refund of twenty-four dollars hall rent. Their request was complied with.

The firemen followed suit and asked that six dollars hall rent be returned to them. It was also refunded.

WANTS TO BE ENGINEER.

Robert Hughson sent in a communication asking that he be appointed engineer and caretaker of Orangeville waterworks. He said he had eight years' experience, and was fully qualified to fill the position satisfactorily. The communication was placed in the hands of the F. & W. committee.

Auditors J. M. Bennett and W. R. Kent made part of their report, which was referred to the Finance committee.

REPORTS.

The R. & B. report, read by Ald. Bailey and adopted, recommended the payment of an account.

Ald. Gillespie brought in a report of the F & W. committee. The report showed that the firemen were poorly equipped, and recommended that six rubber coats, six rubber helmets, six pairs of rubber boots and six pairs of rubber gloves be purchased for the use of the brigade. Reeve Lindsay asked the man from the West if that was a report or a petition. Ald. Gillespie took the question as a rebuke and replied rather sharply. The mayor called order, and after a few of the aldermen had given their views on the matter, Deputy reeve Endacott moved that it be referred back to the F & W. committee, Mr. Endacott's motion carried. All the Solomon were present.

Mr. King read the Cemetery committees report. The committee's were not in favor of increasing the caretaker's salary, and they find fault with the way in which he did his work. No person seconded the report, and it was tabled.

Ald. Cobean produced the Charity report, which recommended the payment of a few accounts. It was adopted.

Mr. Endacott introduced a by law to appoint a board of health. The council went into committee of the whole on the by-law to fill up blanks.

The mayor, the clerk, Wm. Hall (East ward) J. K. Decatur and Wm. Ceasar, constitute the board this year.

Ald. Ketchum introduced a by law to tax dogs. One of the clauses provides that anyone neglecting to comply with the by law is liable to a fine not exceeding $10, or in default of payment thereof, imprisonment for not more than 21 days. The by-law will be amended and passed at the next meeting.

Mr. Bailey introduced a by-law to increase the liquor license fee. The council went into committee of the whole to fill up blanks. This by law, which is the same as last year, received its third reading.

Ald. Ketchum introduced a by-law to define the waterworks engineer's duties and fix his salary. Jesse thought that $200 per annum was enough, but the other members thought that the present salary, $250, free fuel and house rent was just the thing.

GENERAL BUSINESS.

Reeve Lindsey pointed out the advisability of advertising for borrowers so as the council could invest in the sinking fund. The committee of finance will consider the reeve's motion.

The T. P. committee will look into the insurance of corporation property.

Mr. Bailey moved that Messrs. Endacott, Ketchum and himself be a committee to get estimates, etc. on the matter of a better water supply for the town. The committee was appointed and they will go ahead with their work.

Mr. Green said he would move at the next meeting of the council to have fire alarms placed in different parts of the town.

Mr. Ketchum moved that Messrs. Endacott, Green and himself be a committee to advertise the town, with a view to get manufacturies started here. Mr. Youmans wanted to know what the standing committees were appointed for, and moved in amendment that it be referred to the Printing committee. Amendment carried.

Mr. Bailey thought the rules of the council should be revised; and he will see to it at the next meeting.

Mr. Ketchum thought that an overseer should be appointed to look after the R. & B work.

Mr. Bailey wants the chairman of the F. & W. and the captain of the fire brigade to bring in monthly reports about the affairs at the waterworks.

Mayor Walsh thought the present "red tape" system of paying accounts should be supplemented by something better. He had a blank drawn up that would do away with a great deal of the present paraphernalia.

Several of the aldermen had other forms, so the Finance committee will pick out the best.

Mr. Ketchum moved that Robert Hughson be appointed engineer and caretaker for the Orangeville waterworks. No seconder could be found.

Mr. Ketchum gave notice that he intended to have a wood measurer appointed at a yearly salary. His wood by-law, at present, is unworkable.

It was 10:35 o'clock when the council adjourned.

THE 'VARSITY DESTROYED!

Nearly Everything Burned—A Coal Oil Lamp the Cause—Loss Over Half a Million Dollars.

TORONTO, Feb. 14.—Toronto University was totally destroyed by fire to night. The loss is estimated at over half a million dollars. Preparations had been made for the annual conversazione, at which two thousand people were expected to be present, and it was just before the guests commenced to arrive, at 7 o'clock, that the fire broke out. The building is not supplied with enough gas jets, so that on any special evening it is necessary to light up with lamps. Two men were engaged carrying upstairs in a rack half a dozen lighted lamps to be put in chandeliers, when the man on the lower end became frightened that they might fall and instantly let go his hold. The lighted lamps fell and broke oil spreading all over the stairs and down the already oiled floor.

All the buildings were destroyed. The library, worth $100,000; the museum, with its invaluable specimens and curiosities; valuable documents of Dr. Wilson, President of the University; chemical apparatus, mathematical instruments, furniture and utensils were all destroyed.

One domestic was severly, but not fatally burned.

The property including all buildings and contents, was insured in twelve different companies to the extent of $164,000. Following are the names of the companies:—Ætna, Citizens', City Mutual Fire Insurance, Exchange, Hand-in-Hand, American, Hartford, County of Perth Mutual, Quebec, Fire Assurance Company, Queen City, Royal Insurance Company, Royal Canadian and Western.

The stone of which the building was constructed seemed peculiarly susceptible to the heat. It cracked and burst out and came down in masses. Nor did the iron work fare better. On the eastern tower there was a big weather cock, and as the support burned beneath it it bent over and fell amid the ruins. Soon the roof of Convocation Hall followed it into the crater beneath, and the hall was left a ruin utter and unredeemable.

But while a section of the firemen had been fighting the flames in Convocation Hall, the library, along with the various class rooms—English, philosophy, and so on—occupied the eastern part of the main building. The library was the pride of the university. It consisted of about thirty five thousand rare and costly volumes, valued at close upon $100,000. In an adjoining room were about $2,500 worth of instruments, brought specially from the School of Science, and intended to give an exhibition of the progress of the work of the school before the visitors this evening. In this section, too, were the instruments of Prof. London, which were very valuable. To save these costly parts of the equipment and the western section of the University was the next task of the firemen. A few books—possibly less than 100—were carried off ere the smoke became too dense, but in a short time the firemen had to retire, and could only play on the fire through the windows. The fire licked up the books, and burned through the massive floors as if they were built of match boxes and bound together with spider webs, instead of great iron supports. The roof began to give way and the fire to show on the outside. With a ceaseless clatter the heated slate jumped from their place on the roof and fell to the ground. Anon a section of the roof fell with a crash into the burning pile, and brands and sparks, carried by the north westerly wind that blew a gale so quickly did the intense heat consume it and draw it toward the scene of the catastrophe, flew afar over the Queen's Park, spreading discomfort and alarm among the thousands of spectators who stood with white awed faces gazing at the scene of destruction. The doors of the corridors from the eastern entrance had been beaten down, and through the building the wind and flames flew, revealing a long vista of vaunted corridors that glowed like furnaces.

Up the sides of the eastern tower crept the flames. The armory of K Company of the Queen's Own Rifles was situated here, and the rifles were seen bent and twisted with the heat. It was a grand and terrible sight. The great hall filled with fire, the carved rafters standing out clean cut even yet, made a majestic sight, and as the firemen retired to battle with the enemy in the main building the sight became yet grander. There were very few gas jets in the University buildings, and in order to light the various halls and corridors sufficiently four hundred coal oil lamps were used. These doubtless contributed in no small degree to the rapid spread of the fire.

The fire appliances were miserable. There was not a fire alarm in the building, and the nearest fire hydrant was 1,000 feet from the building. The armory of the University company of volunteers was destroyed, and the cartridges, as the flames reached them, exploded with a noise resembling a volley of musketry.

A striking feature of the fire was the falling of the 3,000 pound bell in the main tower of the University. When the framework in which it stood had been burned away the great bell fell, crashing through the huge stone tower, the great tongue sounding as it fell the death knell of the finest University building in the country.

The University was built in 1860. The architect was W. G. Storm. Sir Daniel Wilson, President of the University, is almost heart broken. He was carried from the University grounds almost incapable.

HENRY WARD, the African explorer, in collaboration with D. D. BIDWELL, begins in the New York Ledger of March 1 a series of valuable and entertaing articles descriptive of a canoeing journey of 2,500 miles on the Upper Congo. A more romantic and startling experience could hardly be conceived of than the explorer's adventurous trip, with his thirty reckless Zanzibaris and five Soudanese soldiers, in two war canoes, through the heart of equitorial Africa, ranged by bands of cannibals, and infested by gigantic and ferocious beasts and reptiles, scarcely familiar even to the naturalist. Of his strange adventures in the wild recesses of all that wild and unknown region, the explorer gives a singularly thrilling narrative in the series named—a series which prove of engrossing interest to every thoughtful reader. The articles are illustrated by numerous large sets engraved from photographs taken by Mr. WARD himself.

A POSITIVE FACT.—A school teacher says that pupils who have access to newspapers at home, when compared with those who have not, are better readers, better spellers, better grammarians, excellent in pronunciation and read more understandingly, and obtain a partial knowledge of geography in almost half the time it requires others. The newspaper is decidedly an important factor in modern life.

ANOTHER FIRE!—About ten o'clock on Saturday last the firemen were called out to fight a difficult fire, which originated in a two storey tenement house on Mill-street. The building was owned by Mr. James Hughson and was occupied by himself, and Messrs. John Ferguson and J. A. Glover. The brigade quickly responded to the call, and had two lines of hose laid, but it was fully half-an-hour before sufficient pressure was on to throw the water as high as the roof. The firemen experienced great trouble in getting at the seat of the fire, owing to the great volume of smoke; but when they overcame that difficulty they did very effective work, and had the fire completely extinguished at 11:30. A defective chimney is thought to have caused the conflagration. Mr. Hughson was insured in the Royal for $1,500, which will about cover his loss. Mr. Ferguson, whose household effects were badly damaged while being removed, was insured in the Queen's for $300. Mr. Glover's furniture was roughly handled; he has no insurance.

FATHER MORRIS.

Addressed by the Members Of His Old Congregation.

Father Morris, the present parish priest of Orangeville, late of St. Paul's parish in this city, attended the concert of St. Paul's Commandery, Knights of St. John, on last Monday evening. Father Morris may be said to be the father of the society, for it was under his care that it grew up and flourished. The members did not have the opportunity under the short notice of his removal from Toronto to present him with an address, but they seized the occasion of doing so Monday evening at the close of the concert in Temperance Hall. Among the officers of the society present were: Messrs. J. P. Mallon, J. Kew, C. Toumey, F. McGuire, J. Delaney, J. J. Cahill, J. Larkin, J. J. Flynn, J. J. Wilson, F. J. Harrington, J. Clancy. The address, which was accompanied by a presentation of a handsome set of table cutlery, was as follows:

To the Rev. Father Morris.

It is with deep regret that the society of the Knights of St. John have been compelled to sever the ties that bound us together as priest and people since the formation of our society in the parish of St. Paul, and which severance having been ordered and done for the greater honor and glory of our holy religion, we were in duty bound to bow most submissively though regretfully.

It would be idle, dear father, for us to account for what you have done for us as a society. The counsels you have given us we would not attempt to enumerate, but the spiritual good you have done for the society we would not for a moment presume to mention.

During your connection with our society you have given your every thought for our well-being, spiritually and temporally.

We part with you with regret, but we do so in a truly Catholic spirit, knowing that the loss we sustain will be a benefit to others in the mission to which you are assigned.

We now say good bye to you temporally, and we wish you all the success of your future labors, and confidently trust that you will remember us, your Knights of St. John, in your prayers, and also in the holy sacrifice of the mass, as we will always fully remember your kindness to us.

Finally, dear father, we request of you to accept this offering from the society to show our humble appreciation of you.

Signed on behalf of the society.

J. KEW,
C. TOUMEY,
J. P. MALLON.

Father Morris replied in words devoted to the affection that had always existed between him and the society. He said he would always remember them.—Empire.

Across The Continent.

In thousands of households all over Canada the merits of Yellow Oil, the great family medicine, are well known. It is esteemed as one of the best cures for rheumatism, lumbago, neuralgia, sore throat, croup, quinsy, sprains, bruises, burns and all pain. Used externally.

SHELBURNE.

A choral society has been organized here.

Mr. J. Reaburn has been elected councillor of Malmar by acclamation.

Mr. J. F. Miller has sold his residence on Owen Sound street to A. McTaggart, V. S.

Mr. H. Dudgeon, of Rosemont, was presented with an address and a gold watch by the Methodists of that circuit.

Mr. Thomas Flack, of Nottawasaga, had two fingers amputated by a cutting box a short time ago.

G. B. Irwin sold his stock of dry goods to T. E. Emery, of Orangeville. E. Berwick & Co., purchased it from Mr. Emery.

An alarm of fire was raised at 7.30 on Tuesday evening of last week. The hose-reel and chemical engine companies responded to the call, but their services were not required, as it was only a chimney burning out.

GRAND VALLEY.

Mrs. Moffat, from near Meaford, died at the residence of her son-in-law, Mr. David Small, East Garafraxa, a short while ago. La grippe was the cause.

LIQUOR CASES.—Last week Constable Finlow, of Laurel, paid a visit to the unlicensed hotels in the lower part of the county, and succeeded in finding quantities of liquor on the premises of Albert Wallace, Farmington; Wm. Douglas, town line; John McCourt, town line, near Waldemar; and Mrs. Hand, of Reading. Accordingly on Tuesday the constable had the above parties, along with A. Martin, of Grand Valley, who was charged with selling liquor during prohibited hours, summoned before W. P. Tolton and Wm. Osbourne, J. P.'s, in Forgrave's hall, Waldemar, when the cases were disposed of as follows:—Wallace was fined $56.95, including costs, to be paid with in 30 days; Douglas, $56.75; and McCourt, $58.85, to be paid within 10 days. Martin pleaded guilty and was let off with the light fine of $27.35, including costs. The case against Mrs. Hand was withdrawn, as she stated that the liquor found, which was not a very large quantity, had been ordered by a doctor for use in the family. A second case against McCourt for selling liquor without a license was adjourned for one week, but as the evidence proved that liquor was sold he will probably be convicted. Major Douglas, of Shelburne, was lawyer for the prosecution. Constable Finlow seems determined to make the hotelkeepers obey the law.

CAMILLA.

The ladies of St. Alban's church have instituted a branch of the Woman's Auxiliary. Truly things are progressing in and around Camilla.

Joe. Reid has taken out a license for an auctioneer. We are certain he will be a successful one, he having a large number of friends and acquaintances in the county; also, he is considered an authority as stock valuator.

Parties are now in order; two or three in prospect this week. True, there are to be found those who oppose them; also those who are too modest to attend our debating society, but who do not hesitate to give credence to any little bit of scandal in the neighborhood, aiming it under all circumstances, both opportune and inopportune.

A branch of the A. O. U. W. was organized at this place on Friday evening of last week, with a membership of nineteen, amidst every prospect of rapid increase. The society will be known by the name of "Camilla;" it will be held in rooms fitted up for the purpose in Mr. W. J. Morrison's hotel. A quorum was formed by members from your town and Shelburne. The following officers were elected:—W. S. Piggott, W. M.; W. J. Morrison, P. M. W.; Robert Jackson, Overseer; J. Reid, Foreman; E. J. Cobean, Finance Recorder; J. A. Hewitt, Recorder; W. Lemon, Receiver; W. Little, Guide; Wm. Forsyth, O. G.; J. Robinson, I. G. Messrs. Dynes, Doney, Duke, Trustees.

CARDWELL.

It is rumored that several weddings are on dit.

Mr. Hugh Bracken has disposed of a team of general purpose horses to Mr. G. Munn, of Munn's Corners, Halton county, for the magnificent sum of $300.

We wonder how Joe takes the loss of his should-be bride.

Mr. John McMaster is recovering from the effects of the royal malady.

What's the matter with Cardwell? No dances have taken place around here for quite a while. Somebody says weddings are taking the place of dances.

Mr. So-and-So's new style of religion is not making very many converts around here. A number of books were returned by the Camilla postmaster the other day.

While Mr. John Fleming, an old and well known farmer of the 1st line east, was returning from the county town the other night he had the misfortune to mistake the road leading to his domicile. Instead of keeping on the centre road, Mr. Fleming guided his Arab steeds down the Hockley road and got all mixed up while going over Mr. J. McMaster's premises. The result was an accident, which we are glad to say, did not terminate fatally. The horses, wagon, man and all went over the steep embankment. Everything was badly shaken up. Somebody informed your scribe that John was not himself when he left Orangeville, but we don't believe a word of it.

Business Caused by Dyspepsia.

DIZZINESS is a symptom of dyspepsia. "I have used Burdock Blood Bitters for dizziness, which came over me in spells, so that I had to quit work for a while. The B. B. B. entirely cured me."

JAMES WHITE, Chatsworth, Ont.

CREDIT FORKS.

(Too late for last week.)

Mr. Hilts has taken possession of his new quarry, and is now with eagle-eye on the lookout for stone-cutters, quarrymen, and laborers. This, we hope, will infuse new life into the Forks, and its surroundings, as the mill plies has been dull for some time.

We are sorry to have to announce the death of Sam. Steward, the first victim of le grippe in this neighborhood. This disease seems to have its greatest effect on our biggest men, as three of the worst cases here were men of over two hundred pounds in weight.

A sleigh-load of the "aristocracy" went from here to Erin to hear the Fisk Jubilee Singers at the Oddfellows' concert. We also noticed two or three of "our young hopefuls" with their sweethearts drive by in their "One-hoss Sags." That is right, boys, stick close to them, and they will leave you at the end. Then you may sing with the poet: "Sold, sold—everywhere."

The recent snow has made business lively here. A number of our men have been cutting wood and saw logs for some time, and they were puzzled as to how they were to get this stuff out of the wood, but when they saw "the snow, the burden of their heart rolled away," and they went to work at once with their teams. "Strike the iron while its hot" is a good maxim, and these men have acted upon it.

John Walsh is at the Rambo house waiting for the quarries to open again.

Saw logging is again at a stand still since the recent thaw which has all but swept off the snow.

Mrs. George Cann is lying in a very precarious condition, brought on by a cold, after a recent illness. We sincerely hope she may speedily recover.

G. G. Smith's quarry is taking a rest at present, either the stone is exhausted or Joe or Barney has had "the grip," yet, he is not played out for he has been cutting wood all week assisted by Spudd.

Seth McDonald and George Hunter have been for some time back opening up a new road to the quarry, known as the Vernon, McLean, McDonald quarry, and they are now waiting for orders.

Jack Richardson has opened out a new quarry above the bank of the river behind the saw mill. Likely he intends to ship the rock by the "All River Route" to Toronto.

There was a dance at James St. Croix's Tuesday night. It is a fear before a long fast (Lent.) The young men turned out in full force, but the young ladies were almost minus.

LIFE IS BUT A GAME OF CARDS.

Life is but a game of cards,
Which each one has to learn,
Each shuffles, cuts and deals a pack,
And each a trump doth turn.
Some turn a high card at the top,
While others turns a low;
Some hold a hand quite full of trumps,
While others none can show.

Some shuffle with a practical hand,
And pack their cards with care;
So they may know when they are dealt,
Where all the leaders are;
Thus fools are made the dupes of rogues,
And roughs each other cheat,
But he is very wise indeed,
Who never meets defeat.

In playing, some lead the ace,
Their counting card to serve,
Some play the deuce and some the tray,
And many play the knave;
Some play for money and some for fun,
And more for wordly fame,
And not until the game's played out,
Can they count up their gain.

When hearts are trumps we play for love,
Then pleasure deck's the hour,
No thoughts of sorrow checks our joy,
In Rosey's beauteous bower;
We dance and sing, sweet music make,
Our cards at random play,
And while the heart remains on top,
Our game is but a holiday.

When diamonds chance to crown the top,
Then players stake their gold,
And heavy sums are won and lost,
By gamblers, young and old;
Intent on winning, each doth watch
His cards with eager eye,
So he may watch his neighbor's hand,
And cheat him on the sly.

When clubs are trumps, look out for war,
On ocean and on land,
For bloody deeds are often done
When clubs are in the hand;
Then lives are staked instead of gold,
The days are worn out bread,
Across the broad Atlantic now,
See clubs have got the lead.

And last of all is when the spade
Is turned by hand of time,
And always finishes up the game,
In every land and every clime;
No matter how much a man may win,
Or how much a man may save,
You'll find the spade turns up at last,
And digs the player's grave.

The Common Lot.

There is a place no love can reach,
There is a time no voice can teach,
There is a chain no power can break,
There is a sleep no sound can wake.

Sooner or later that time will arrive, that place will wait for your coming, that chain must bind you in helpless death, that sleep must fall on your senses. But thousands every year go untimely to their fate, and thousands more lengthen out their days by heedful, timely care. For the failing strength the weakening organs, the wasting blood, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is a wonderful restorative and a prolonger of strength and life. It purifies the blood and invigorates the system, thereby fortifying it against disease. Of druggists.

The progress that St. Joseph's Island has made since 1876, when it had a population of only a couple of hundred, and but very few of them white people, is worthy of note. It has risen until it has now between three and four thousand inhabitants, which would be a mark if for a country with nothing but its agricultural and timber resources to help it, if it was not a reflection of the progress every noticeable all over the District of Algoma.

TO PUT DOWN RIOT

Vigorous Measures Adopted to Prevent a Repetition of the Hull Affair.

OTTAWA, Feb. 17.—The Hull city council held an informal meeting this afternoon. At Mayor Scott's suggestion it was decided to increase the police force sufficiently to enable them to check any disturbance that may occur. It was decided to telegraph to Toronto for twenty policemen, and a detective was appointed to procure twenty of the Dominion force, and ten of the Ottawa city force.

It was arranged that if the police could not be obtained the 43rd battalion should be called out.

A deputation from the Evangelical Alliance waited on Mayor Scott and police magistrate Dugas, of Hull, this morning, to claim protection for the evangelists. The deputation was assured that the most effectual means possible would be taken to prevent a recurrence of the disturbances, and they would communicate to the deputation later in the day what action they had decided on.

Famous Women.

It is a significant fact that most of the women who have achieved fame in art, literature, or "affairs," have enjoyed vigorous health. This shows that the mind is never capable of the severe and continued application necessary to creative work, unless the body is at its best. The women who aspires to fill an exalted place among her associates, must be free from the debility and female weakness. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will banish them, and it is warranted to restore those functional harmonies which are indispensable to health. As a specific for all those chronic weaknesses and ailments peculiar to women, it is unequaled.

A FATAL KNOCK-OUT.

A Sparring Exhibition That Results in the Death of Tom. James.

DALLAS, Texas, Feb. 14.—Jake Kilrain and his sparring troupe exhibited at the Opera House last night. After some uneventful sparring, Tom. James, of Dallas, encountered Banzia, the combination champion light weight, for $25. The conditions were that James should stay four rounds. Banzia had it all his own way from the first. In the fourth round Banzia struck James in the neck, knocking him limp on the stage. James was unable to rise. He was sponged and restoratives applied. The show continued, no one supposing James was hurt seriously. When the entertainment had concluded Muldoon announced that James was unconscious, and called for a physician. Banzia had lost. James died at 12:30, the 15th inst. The entire combination were held for murder. Banzia returned and surrendered himself. Today Muldoon paid the doctor's bill, ($30) and contributed $100 to defray the funeral expenses. Financial assistance was tendered to James' wife by the wrestler, Kilrain and party (excepting Banzia) left for New Orleans.

A later despatch states that Banzia was acquitted.

Great Little Men.

Some of the greatest men that ever lived were of small stature and insignificant appearance. The reader will readily recall many instances. Very small are Dr Pierce's Pleasant Purgative Pellets, but they are far more effective than the huge, old-fashioned pills which are so difficult to swallow and so harsh in their action. The "Pellets" are gentle and never cause constipation. For liver, stomach and bowel derangements they have no equal.

TWO WOMEN MURDERED.

One By Her Drunken Husband—Another, a Dissolute Character, by an Unknown Man.

LONDON Ont., February 18.—Harry Smith, aged about 65 years, residing on Regent street, was arrested to-night charged with the murder of his wife. There appears to have been trouble in the family for some time past and Mrs. Smith, through fear of her husband, left her home on Monday and remained away until this evening when she returned. About 8 o'clock Smith told the neighbors that Mrs. Smith had killed herself. The police were summoned, and found the woman placed upright in an arm chair, with blood oozing from several terrible wounds on the head and face, which had evidently been inflicted with a heavy iron poker which was found covered with blood and hair in the room. When arrested Smith's hands and face and clothing were bespattered with blood. He had been drinking during the day, but was sober when taken into custody. Smith's son is now serving a month in jail for assaulting his father. At the trial the son claimed the assault was committed while protecting his mother from the blows of her husband.

A Murder in Belleville.

BELLEVILLE, Ont, February 18.—Hannah Cole, a woman of abandoned character, was found in a dying condition in ex Mayor Lingham's barn this morning, having been most brutally beaten into insensibility by some unknown men who were seen with her last night. She was taken to the hospital and died there about 11 o'clock this morning. A warrant has been issued for the apprehension of William Arnott as the murderer. The accused is a big man, 6 feet 1 inch in height, knock kneed with stooped shoulders and brown moustache. Richard Arnott, a brother of the accused, has been arrested, but the police have been unable to find any trace of the supposed murderer.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT AND PILLS.—Ever useful. The afflicted in illness should look their diseases fully in the face, and at once seek a remedy for them. A short search will convince the most sceptical that these noble medicaments have afforded ease, comfort, and oftentimes complete recovery, to the most tortured sufferers. The Ointment will cure all descriptions of sores, wounds, bad legs, sprains, eruptions, erysipelas, rheumatism, gout, and skin affections. The Pills never fail in correcting and strengthening the stomach, and in restoring a deranged liver to a wholesome condition, in rousing torpid kidneys to increase their secretion, and in re-establishing the natural healthy activity of the bowels. Holloway's are the remedies for complaints of all classes of society.
